LANARKSHIRE,

OR as it is sometimes designated CLYDEDALE, is a large, populous, and highly important manufacturing district, in the western part of the Lowlands or southern division of Scotland; bounded by Dumfries-shire on the south, the counties of Ayr and Renfrew on the west, those of Dumbarton and Stirling on the north, Linlithgowshire and Edinburghshire on the south-east, and Peebles on the east. Its extreme length (from south-south-east to north-north-west) is somewhat more than fifty miles, and its greatest breadth in the middle (from east to west) is about thirty-four miles; it includes within its area about nine hundred and forty-two square miles of land, and three square miles of lakes; about one-half of the entire is calculated to be under cultivation. At an early period this extensive district was, for convenience, divided into two wards, called the Over Ward and the Nether Ward, Lanark being the chief town and seat of justice of the former, and Rutherglen of the latter; this arrangement was altered during the last century, when the county was divided into three wards, namely, the Upper, the Nether or Lower, and the Middle Wards, the chief towns being Glasgow, Lanark, and Hamilton, and each district subject to the jurisdiction of a sheriff-substitute. The central part of the county throughout is termed Clydesdale, or the Vale of Clyde, from being the basin of that beautiful and useful river, of which we shall say more hereafter. Throughout the arduous struggle for Scottish independence, Lanark was the theatre of many miseries and military excesses. Under the reign of James I. a portion of the county was taken from it, and formed into the district of Renfrew. At a subsequent date, the turbulence of the Douglasses, with the intrigues of the first Lord Hamilton, involved Lanarkshire in the various calamities consequent upon intestine warfare; it subsequently became subject to a thirty years' civil commotion, stimulated by the persecution of the more zealous presbyterians of this district by Charles I.; the revolution of 1688, however, was the harbinger of a more tranquil future, and it has ever since advanced in wealth and every species of improvement.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, CLIMATE, &c.—The upper division of the county is very mountainous; from Tinto, looking northwards, the face of the country is softened down to gentle elevations and gradual depressions. The Upper Ward, which may be deemed three-fifths of the county, is mostly hilly and moorish; and from the nature of the soil and the altitude of the surface cannot be considered susceptible of much agricultural improvement. At the commencement of the Middle Ward, the elevation of the land is obviously diminished, while the declivity continues descending towards the north-west; the surface is everywhere diversified by frequent inequalities, so as to leave no level space except the valleys along the river; indeed the Middle Ward, though esteemed a good agricultural district, is nearly one third moss land. The Lower Ward is of a very limited extent, and derives its justly acquired importance from being the seat of a most abundant population. The commencement of improvement in soil and cultivation, in this part of Scotland, was not apparent until about the middle or nearer the end of the eighteenth century; from this period, draining, planting, and enclosing took place in various districts; wheat, barley and oats (the two latter more abundantly) are produced from different soils in the county; potatoes are planted in considerable quantities; turnips are sown pretty generally, and artificial grasses are profusely raised in every direction. Some flax is likewise grown, which is spun by females, who dispose of the yarn in the markets of Lanark, Biggar, Carnwath, and other places. Gardens and orchards occupy many acres of land, particularly on the banks of the Clyde; in this part they are of the most luxuriant growth, the orchards consisting chiefly of apple, pear, and plum trees. In the neighbourhood of Carluke strawberries are also grown in abundance. The inhabitants of the inland and upland districts breed and graze great numbers of black cattle and sheep. In mineral productions, Lanarkshire is, perhaps, the richest in Scotland. Gold to an important amount was, at an early period, found in this county; and in later days, on the sides of a rivulet called the Wenlock, small pieces of that precious metal, in a pure state, have frequently been picked up from among the sand and soil brought down by the torrents from the precipices and slopes of the mountains; particles of gold have also been found in Crawford Muir, with some large pieces of lapis lazuli. At present plentiful supplies of lead may be had in the parish of Crawford; and coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, sandstone, whinstone, fire-clay, and a variety of other metallic, mineral, and fossil substances are to be obtained abundantly in different districts of the county. The lead mines belonging to the Earl of Hopetoun, at Leadhills, afford employment and maintenance to a large number of workmen. Owing to the discovery of large quantities of bituminous shale, the manufacture of paraffin oil has been extending very rapidly in the neighbourhoods of Airdrie, Coatbridge, and other places, and this manufacture bids fair soon to become one of the most important in the district. Glasgow being the paramount seat of the manufactures for which Lanarkshire is so eminently distinguished, it is unnecessary in this article to treat of the subject at any length, as under the head of that most important city unsparing notice will be taken of whatever is connected with its commerce and products; it need only be mentioned in this place that the cotton goods for which Glasgow is the vast depository are to a very considerable extent woven in different villages and parishes in the county, and that this branch of manufacture alone yields support to a very large proportion of the dense population.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the noble and pre-eminently useful Clyde, which is formed by the concentration of a number of straggling burns and rivulets, rising amid the mountains, and issuing from the waters which separate Lanarkshire from the counties of Peebles and Dumfries. The chief of these tributaries are the Powtrail water, the Grook burn, and the Even and Elvan waters; these coalescing compose a stream that, after flowing about two miles, receives an accession, first from Glengonar water, and next from Duncaton water, which constitute properly the river Clyde, at a distance of upwards of twelve miles from the highest springs of its fountains. The Clyde flows in a longitudinal direction, in a winding course of more than sixty miles, dividing the county into two nearly equal parts, and ultimately falls into the Firth of Clyde, opposite the Isle of Bute. It ranks amongst the largest rivers of Scotland, and is navigable for vessels of one thousand tons burthen as far as the city of Glasgow. It waters and conduces to the fertility of delightful valleys, and in its progress forms several falls and cascades of a picturesque and romantic character particularly "the Falls of Clyde," which, with the beautiful scenery around, possess an almost irresistibly attractive influence in the minds and over the feelings of visitors for pleasure, and admirers of natural loveliness. On either side, the grand river receives a variety of tributaries, all of them respectively of important advantage in their application to the machinery of manufacturing and agricultural mills; the most prominent of these secondary rivers within the shire are the Douglas water, the Mouse, the Nethan, the Aven, the Calder, the North Calder, and the Kelvin; there are other minor streams, of still less magnitude and consequence, as the Elwin, the Little Clyde, the Cotten, the Logan, and the Avon. The greatest elevations of this country, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are:—The Lowther Hills, 2,450 feet; Tinto, 2,336; Culter Fell, 1,700; Welstoun Mount, 1,550; Leven Seat, 1,250; and Dickmount Hill, 700. The numerous lines of rail which permeate this county have given such facilities for the transmission of its products and its wants as to cause considerable change in its character, and also in the relative position of a large portion of its population.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Lanarkshire comprises (including the city parishes of Glasgow) forty-nine parishes and two parts of parishes, which form four presbyteries in the synod of Glasgow and Ayr; it contains five royal and parliamentary burghs—Glasgow, Airdrie, Lanark, Rutherglen, and Hamilton. The county returns two representatives to the Imperial legislature; the city of Glasgow elects three members; and the royal burgh of Lanark, in conjunction with Hamilton and Airdrie in this county, Linlithgow, in the county of that name, and Falkirk, in Stirlingshire, contribute another member. The present members for the county are for the Northern Division, Sir Thomas Edward Colebrook, of Crawford, Bart. (who is also lord lieutenant), and for the Southern Division, John Glencairn Carter Hamilton, Esq., of Dalziel. The parliamentary constituency of the Northern Division was in 1881-82, 10,736, that of the Southern Division being 3,695. This county, according to the census returns of 1871, contained a population of 377,874 males and 387,465 females; total, 765,339. In 1881 the figures were: males, 449,192; females, 465,213; total, 914,405, showing an increase over 1871, of 139,066. The number of inhabited houses at the last named year was 180,167; uninhabited, 23,486; building, 934.

AIRDRIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CALDERBANK, CLARKSTON, DRUMGELLOCH, GLENMAVIS, GREENGAIRS, MOFFAT, RAWYARDS, STAND, PLAINS, CALDERCROUX, WHITERIGG, NEW MONKLAND, AND CHAPELHALL.

AIRDRIE is a thriving market and post town, and a burgh of barony (recently separated from the parish of New Monkland, and erected into a quoad sacra parish), 18 miles N.N.E. from Lanark, 31 W. from Edinburgh, and 11 E. from Glasgow; eligibly situated on the great or middle road between the two cities, and occupying a rising ground with its principal slope to the west. The advance of Airdrie has been very rapid, and it is now one of the most flourishing inland towns in Scotland; its commercial prosperity being attributable to the large earnings of the vast numbers employed at the various iron smelting works, mines, collieries, and oil works with which the district abounds. There are also several engineering works and ironfoundries in the town, amongst which those of Messrs. Dick & Stevenson, Messrs. Stevenson & Mackay, and Messrs. Gibb & Hogg take a prominent lead, and who, with some others of less note, contribute largely to the sources of profitable employment. The country is intersected in every direction by railroads for the transmission of coal, &c. to the various ironworks, and to Glasgow, with which city, and every part of the kingdom, communication is maintained several times daily. The Monkland canal also approaches within a mile and a half of the town. Exclusive of the iron and coal works, no considerable number are employed in the Airdrie cotton works. Hand loom weaving, which at one time occupied large numbers in the town, is now almost extinguished by the introduction of steam power. At MOFFAT and CALDERCROUX, silk and calico printing and paper manufacturing are in full operation. Branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal, the National, the Clydesdale, and the British Linen Company Banks are settled here. There are excellent hotels and posting establishments, and the shops for general supply are well stored with every necessary article for the demand of a busy population. The Advertiser, a highly respectable newspaper, is printed and published here weekly, by the enterprising firm of Messrs. Baird & Hamilton, and is ably edited and enjoys a very extensive circulation.

The burgh consists of several principal streets, with others of a smaller class diverging from them; it is built on a regular plan, has many excellent houses, is lighted with gas, and well supplied with good water. It possesses a town hall, ornamented with a spire and clock. There is also a handsome pile called the County Buildings, in which the sheriff court is held every Tuesday and Friday; a justice of peace court every Monday and Thursday, and in which are also the offices of the sheriff clerk, the clerk of the peace, the procurator fiscal, and other public functionaries. The burgh is governed by a regular bench of magistrates, composed of a provost, three bailies and eight councillors, with a treasurer and town clerk; it unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Linlithgow and Falkirk in returning one member to Parliament. The places of worship comprise those of the Established church, the Free church, United Presbyterian church, Reformed Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, Baptist, and Roman Catholic chapels. The town has several good schools, among which is the Airdrie Academy, opened in 1849, and erected at the sole expense of the proprietor, Mr. Alexander, of Airdrie Hall, at an outlay of upwards of £2,500. In the surrounding neighbourhood there are many neat modern villas and handsome residences; Airdrie House, a short distance to the west of the town, stands amidst some fine pleasure grounds. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday; fairs are held on the last Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November. The population of the burgh in 1871 was 19,483, and in 1881, 13,363.

CLARKSTON is a village in the parish of New Monkland, two miles east from Airdrie, on the principal road between Edinburgh and Glasgow, containing a church of the Establishment and a Board school.

CALDERBANK is a considerable village, also in the parish of New Monkland, about two miles south from Airdrie; this place derives its importance from the Monkland Iron Company, Limited, whose works are situated here. Population in 1871, 2,139.

CHAPELHALL is a village in the parish of Bothwell, but in the postal district of Airdrie; it lies about a mile east from Calderbank, and is like that place, chiefly dependent on the works of the Monkland Iron Company, Limited. There are two places of worship, a Free Presbyterian and one for Roman Catholic; also two schools. Population in 1871, 1,707.

GLENMAVIS is a village in New Monkland parish, one and a half miles from Airdrie; the parish church and schools are situated here.

GREENGAIRS is a village in New Monkland parish, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from and in the postal district of Airdrie; there is a Free church and an Established church and a Board school. The village is situated in an extensive coal district. Population in 1871, 450.

PLAINS is a small village one and a half miles east from Clarkston, in the parish of New Monkland, and is a station on the Monkland District of the North British Railway. There are two forges in this neighbourhood for the manufacture of shovels, &c., and a short distance further east, at CALDERCROUX, are the extensive calico printing works of Mr. John Glen, and the paper works of Messrs. Robert Craig & Sons.

RAWYARDS, WHITERIGG, STAND, DRUMGELLOCH and MOFFAT are small villages in the parish of New Monkland, and postal district of Airdrie; at the last named place is a second paper works of Messrs. Robert Craig & Sons, and also a silk printing establishment.

AND THE PARISHES OF CULTER, COVINGTON AND THANKERTON (UNITED), KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON AND GLENHOLM (UNITED), SKIRLING, SYMINGTON, WANDELL AND LAMINGTON (UNITED), WISTON AND ROBERTON (UNITED), AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BIGGAR is a small neat town in the parish of its name, in the upper ward of Lanark, 23 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 32 s.e. from Glasgow, 16 w. from Peebles, and 12½ s.e. from Lanark, situate on the road between the two last-named towns. The town, which consists principally of a spacious and tolerably neat-built main street, was created a baronial burgh by charter of James II. to Lord Robert Fleming of Biggar, in the fifteenth century. It greatly owes its prosperity to a large and populous neighbourhood, the buildings are handsome, and the shops are well laid out, the whole being lighted with gas by a company formed in 1839. The Caledonian Railway Company, in 1858-9, constructed a single branch line of rails from their main line at Symington, passing through Biggar and terminating at Peebles, a distance of about 20 miles. This line is very advantageous, and adds greatly to the benefit of the inhabitants of Biggar and surrounding neighbourhoods. The chief employment of the inhabitants is weaving for the Glasgow houses. There are a few good inns, an auction mart, and three banking establishments—branches respectively of the Commercial, the National and the Royal Banks of Scotland. In 1545, Lord Fleming founded and endowed a collegiate church for a provost, eight prebends, four singing boys, and six poor men; it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and built in the form of a cross in a plain Gothic style; this ancient place of worship is now the parish church; there are also two United Presbyterian churches, one of which has recently been rebuilt in a handsome style. At a short distance from the town are still to be seen some remains of Boghall Castle, the once feudal stronghold of the Fleming family, and the principal residence of successive lords of that name until late in the seventeenth century, according to several accounts (some of which are traditional). Its next possessors were the Elphinstones, through whose neglect it fell into decay; at a comparatively recent date, however, it has been subjected to greater destruction than time would have wrought, for its walls have been pulled down, and the materials carried off to form drains and dykes in the neighbourhood; the antiquarian would now find it difficult to trace out its former extent, for latterly the plough of the husbandman has passed through its once spacious courts. Tradition reports a bloody engagement to have taken place near this town, between the Scots, under Wallace, and the English army, when that distinguished leader drove the latter into a morass, where most of them perished. The parish is six miles in length by three and a half in breadth, embracing 7,732 statute acres, having the river Clyde on its western boundary, Peebles-shire on the east, and the parish of Covington on the west. The weekly market is held on Monday; and the fair on the last Thursday in January and October, third Thursday in July (old style), and last Thursday in April. In 1871 the parish had a population of 2,013; and in 1881, 2,128, the town possessing 1,596 of this number.

CULTER is the next adjoining parish to Biggar, on the south-west having the river Clyde passing through it. It is also a station on the Peebles-shire branch of the Caledonian railway. Agriculture and sheep farming appear to be carried on extensively; several handsome residences and tastefully wooded grounds contribute to the beauty of the scenery, which is here bold and attractive. A small portion of the parish is in Peebles-shire, and the whole of it contains an area of 11,883 statute acres. Population in 1871, 593.

COVINGTON and THANKERTON are united parishes on the north-west bank of the river Clyde, the parish church being situated about six miles north from Biggar; extensive tracts are here devoted to pasture, and the remaining portions to agriculture; at the small village of Thankerton there is a station on the Caledonian line of railway. There is a public library here, which contains upwards of 2,000 volumes, and was established in the year 1799. The principal landowners are Sir Simon M. Lockhart, Bart. of Lee, and Sir Windham C. J. C. Anstruther, Bart. of Carmichael. The united parishes contain an area of 5,114 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population numbering 454.

KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON and GLENHOLM are also united parishes, partly adjoining and stretching along east and south of Biggar; but although in the county of Peebles, they are within the postal district assigned to Biggar. A succession of lofty eminences here meet the eye in every direction, most of the hills being clothed with verdure to their summits, vast numbers of sheep graze over them; at the neat hamlet of Broughton there is a station on the Peebles branch of the Caledonian railway, four and a half miles south-east from Biggar. There is an Established church and a Free church, also a board school for each of the parishes. The principal landowners are the Rev. William Welsh, of Mushfennan; James Tweedie, Esq. of Quarter; Sir James M. Naismith, Bart. of Powso; and A. B. McIntosh, Esq. of Hardington. The area of the united parishes embraces 18,065 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population numbering 729.

SKIRLING is a parish and small village of the same name; the latter, in which stands the parish church, is about two miles east from Biggar, and although belonging to Peebles-shire, it is within the postal district and Presbytery of Biggar; the general features of the district are of the same hilly and undulating character, noticeable throughout the surrounding country, but in a more advanced state of cultivation. The parish is about 3 miles long, by 2½ in width, and contains an area of 3,425 statute acres. The whole of the land in the parish belongs to Sir William H. G. Carmichael, Bart. Population in 1871, 325, and in 1881, 274.

SYMINGTON is another of those rural parishes south-west from Biggar about three miles. It is watered by the river Clyde, and is a junction on the Caledonian railway, at which the Peebles line branches off. The most striking feature throughout this district is the mountain of Tinto, towering to a height of 2,336 feet above the level of the sea. There is an Established church and a board school. Acreage, 3,504; population in 1871, 442.

WANDELL and LAMINGTON are united parishes close to the Caledonian line of railway; the village of Lamington being six miles south-west from Biggar; in addition to the parish church, there is an Episcopal chapel, built by the Right Hon. Lord Lamington, whose seat, Lamington House, is in close proximity. The mountain of Tinto, 2,336 feet, and Coulter Fell, 2,330 feet above sea level, are the loftiest eminences in this very romantic neighbourhood. Acreage, 12,830; population in 1871, 332.

WISTON and ROBERTON are united parishes, the former about three miles s.e. from Lamington railway station, and the latter seven miles s.e. from Biggar. Acreage, 13,140; population in 1871, 630.

BLANTYRE AND CAMBUSLANG.

BLANTYRE, or HIGH BLANTYRE, is a small ancient village, in the parish of its name; eight miles south by east from Glasgow, and between three and four miles from Hamilton; situate on the road between the last named town and Kilbride, and in a rich fertile district, in the middle ward of the shire—the parish having a front to the Clyde of about two miles and a half, and extending six miles in length; it embraces an area of 3,954 acres. At BLANTYRE STATION, rather more than a mile from the village, are the dye works of Messrs. Monteith & Co. and a weaving factory. In the parish is a spring strongly impregnated with sulphur; the water is of a similar quality to that of St. Bernard's well, near Edinburgh; it was formerly much resorted to, and is still efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and scorbutic cases. On the south bank of the Clyde, directly opposite to Bothwell Castle, on a rocky eminence, stand the ruins of the once splendid priory of Blantyre, founded early in the thirteenth century. At the Reformation the priory was demolished, and its revenues, with the patronage of the parish church, were given by James VI. to Walter Stewart, afterwards lord treasurer of Scotland, and created a baron in 1606 with the title of Lord Blantyre. The family is distinguished in both Scottish and British history. This village is also celebrated as having been the birth-place of Dr. Livingstone, the celebrated African explorer and philanthropist, who was born in a house at Shuttle row, Low Blantyre. Population of Blantyre parish in 1871, 3,472.

CAMBUSLANG is a small parish, about three miles square, lying on the banks of the Clyde, with Blantyre on the east, Kilbride on the south, and Rutherglen on the west. The kirk, which is about four and a half miles from Glasgow, and six from Hamilton, prior to the Reformation belonged to a prebend of Glasgow Cathedral; there was also at that time a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary; in 1565, the chaplain, Sir John Millar, made grants of the property endowed for its support; these lands are still called "Chapel lands." Cambuslang parish, which embraces an area of 5,160 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 3,740, of which number 393 belonged to the village.

NEWTON is a small hamlet in the parish of Cambuslang, and two miles distant from the village of that name. It has a station on the Caledonian line, close to which and the extensive works of the Steel Company of Scotland.

CARRIER.

To HAMILTON & GLASGOW, Peter Ball,
from Blantyre daily

CARLUKE AND BRAIDWOOD,

WITH THE HAMLETS OF KILNCADZOW AND LAW.

CARLUKE is a small town (formerly a burgh of barony), in the parish of its name, 32 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 20 s.e. from Glasgow, 10 s.e. from Hamilton, and 5 n.w. from Lanark. The parish, which lies on the north-east bank of the Clyde, is said to derive its name from St. Luke, to whom its old parish church was dedicated, the adjunct Car signifying a strength or castle; the former was ruinous before the Reformation, and of the latter no traces remain to mark its site. The town contains several regular streets, Kirkton street, High street and Hamilton street, each having a number of handsome stone buildings, and the shops are lighted with gas. Besides the parish church there is a Free church, one each for United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, Evangelical Unionists, and Roman Catholics; and also a number of schools. Few districts are richer in minerals, of coals, ironstone and limestone than that of Carluke. In 1836-7 extensive works were erected by the Shotts Iron Company; they are situated about a mile north of the town, and consist of three blast furnaces, with steam engines in connection, of the aggregate power of 140 horses. The coal, ironstone, and limestone are respectively of the best quality. The trade of the town and neighbourhood is chiefly confined to mining. Two branch banking establishments are settled here—the British Linen Co.'s Bank and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited; also a well-conducted Savings bank, which has greatly encouraged industry and provident habits among the inhabitants at large. There are also two steam corn mills, several brick works, a preserve manufactory, two engineering works, an iron foundry, and three firms who carry on an extensive business as timber merchants. The banks of the Clyde have long been famous for the culture of fruit-trees. Apples, pears and gooseberries are produced in great abundance, and in higher perfection in this district than in any other in Scotland, and orchards of the last-named fruit are annually disposed of at very remunerative prices, one property alone having realised in the season 1872 the handsome sum of £501. As a proof of the richness of the soil, may be mentioned the growth of strawberries, which of late years have been cultivated more extensively than in any other part of Scotland, and now forms a prominent feature in the produce of the district. A large portion of the produce is usually purchased by the jelly and preserved fruit manufacturers, whilst great quantities are forwarded to the Glasgow markets. The margin of the river is adorned with many beautiful mansions, and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds, and the beauty of the woodland scenery in this part is justly admired. That profound mathematician, Major-General William Roy, was a native of this parish. Fairs are held on the second Thursday in March, 21st of May and the 31st of October. There is also a great cattle show held here yearly, on the last Wednesday in July. The parish has an area of 15,345 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 7,069 and in 1881, 8,066; the town of Carluke containing 4,000 of that number.

BRAIDWOOD is a small village in the parish of Carluke, two miles from that town, situate about half a mile to the right of the road leading to Lanark. A large chemical works, owned by Mr. James Martin, Carluke, is in full operation, the same gentleman has also two large steam saw mills at Braidwood and Carluke respectively, and is also a large importer of timber. Three brick and tile, an engineering works, and several collieries comprise the other industries of the place. A little to the north-west of the village is Braidwood House, a handsome stone mansion, and about half a mile nearer to the Clyde is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, apparently of the eleventh and twelfth century, consisting of a tower and keep in good preservation; but of the origin or uses of the structure tradition and history are alike silent. The building, which is partly inhabited, has recently been thoroughly repaired. It is called by the country people Ha'-bar (Hall-bar). Besides Braidwood there are the hamlets of KILNCADZOW and LAW in the parish at each of which there is a Board school. At the latter place are two new churches, one for the Established church of Scotland and the other the Free church. Law also has now a very fine railway station, being a junction which here connects the Caledonian main line to England and the South of Scotland with the new line to Perth, Stirling and the North.

CARNWATH AND CARSTAIRS,

WITH AUCHENGGRAY, BRAEHEAD, DOLPHINTON, DUNSYRE, FORTH, HAYWOOD, LIBERTON, NEWBIGGING, PETTINAIN, WALSTON, WILSONTOWN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CARNWATH is a village or small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, 25 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 27 E.S.E. from Glasgow, 7 N. from Biggar, and the same distance E. from Lanark, situate on the main road between the latter town and Edinburgh. It consists of one street, nearly three-quarters of a mile in length. About the centre is the tolbooth, a plain old building, in front of which is the cross, an obelisk, whereon the distances from Edinburgh to various places in Clydesdale and Ayrshire are distinctly marked. The houses, which are neat slate-roofed dwellings, have considerably augmented in number of late years. Sir Simon M'Donald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carawath, is superior of the burgh. The estate is held of the crown, on payment of a pair of red hose, which are run for annually on the day succeeding the August fair, and followed by athletic games, to the successful competitors for superiority in which are awarded medals and prizes in money. The church stands at the western end of the town, contiguous to a fragment of the ancient edifice, which prior to the Reformation belonged to the cathedral of Glasgow. The stone frame of the north window is still entire, and presents a fine specimen of masonry in the Gothic style; another portion of the old building is now used as a sepulchre for the Lockhart family; it contains the remains of the former lords of the manor, the Somervilles, and a tomb on which a Lord Somerville is represented lying in complete armour, along with the figure of his wife, in the exact costume of the fifteenth century. The present church was erected in 1866, upon the site of the former one built about 1793. It is a handsome freestone building, of the Gothic style of architecture, and will accommodate 1,000 persons. About a mile to the north-west of Carnwath, are the scattered ruins of Cowthally Castle, in former ages the seat of the Somervilles. The Caledonian Railway Company have constructed a branch line, commencing from the main line at Carstairs Junction, passing through Dunysyre and terminating at Dolphinton, the whole distance being eleven miles and a quarter. There is also a branch line to Haywood and Wilson-town. The market, which is on Friday, is principally for meal. Fairs are held on the last Friday in February (new style), for hiring servants; the first Wednesday in April, for show of stallions, seeds and plants; the first Thursday in July (old style), for horses and cattle; the second Wednesday in August, for horses and cattle; and the Friday before the 31st of October, for hiring servants. The following villages in Carnwath parish may be briefly noticed, viz.—AUCHENGGRAY, five miles north of Carnwath, and a station on the Caledonian line. There is a United Presbyterian church here, and in the neighbourhood are several mineral oil works. BRAEHEAD, three miles north, where there are an United Presbyterian church and a board school. FORTH, five and a half miles north; there is a branch of the British Linen Co. Bank established here. HAYWOOD and WILSONTOWN, the latter six miles from Carnwath. At each place is a station on a branch of the Caledonian line. In the village of Haywood there is a board school, and at Wilsontown there is a Free church and subscription school. The parish, which embraces an area of 80,448 statute acres, had in 1871 a population of 5,709 and in 1881, 5,836, of this number 845 were returned for the town.

CARSTAIRS is a small village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Lanark, four miles east of the latter town, three west of Carnwath, and about a mile east from Carstairs Junction on the Caledonian railway. This was evidently a place of some consequence at the time of the Romans, from the number and magnitude of architectural and other remains of that people which have frequently been turned up when digging below the surface. The cottages of this rural village have a remarkably neat appearance, being tastefully adorned with shrubs and flowers at the expense of the proprietor of the place. At some short distance from the village, embosomed in thriving plantations, is Carstairs House, the family mansion of Robert Monteith, Esq. of Carstairs, the principal and owner. The three fairs which were formerly held here, having gradually declined, are now altogether discontinued. Population of the parish in 1871 was 1,718, and in 1881, 2,000; acreage, 9,830.

DOLPHINTON and WALSTON are adjoining parishes of a pastoral character, the former 9 miles east from Carnwath, and is the terminus of the Dolphinton branch of the Caledonian line. The places of worship are the parish and Episcopal churches, whilst at Walston there are the parish church and a Free church. There are board schools in each village. Acreage, Dolphinton, 8,574; Walston, 4,561. Population in 1881, Dolphinton, 239; Walston, 425.

DUNSYRE (from dun-syrrh, a steep hill) is a rural parish, bounded by Dolphinton and Walston on the south, and Carnwath on the west and north-west. The district lies high, and is chiefly devoted to pasture and agriculture. The village, with the parish church, stands in the south-east part of the parish, on the high road. From the twelfth century to the Reformation the parish was a rectory of the monks of Kelso. Acreage, 10,749. Population, 808.

LIBERTON and PETTINAIN are parishes, each being about 3 miles south of Carnwath. The populations are chiefly employed in agricultural pursuits. COATBRIDGE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF OLD MONKLAND AND CADDIE; ALSO THE VILLAGES OF BAILLIESTON, BISHOP BRIGGS, GARNKIRK, GLENBOIG, CHRYSTON, DUNDYVAN, MOODIESBURN, GARTSHERRIE, MOUNT VERNON, WHIFFLET, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COATBRIDGE is a populous town in the parish of Old Monkland, situated on the Glasgow and Edinburgh road, eight miles east from Glasgow, and two miles west from Airdrie. Although but a few years ago this place was of trifling importance, yet by its local advantages, which consists in abundance of coal and ironstone, it has now become very populous, and its well-stored shops and busy streets give it the appearance of a thriving town. The North British and Caledonian Railways pass through the town, as does the Monkland canal, and they add very considerably to the wealth of the locality by affording ready transit to its productions. In the vicinity are five establishments for the manufacture of pig iron—viz: the Gartscherrie, the Calder, the Carnbroe, the Langloan, and those of Summerlee, all of which are on an extensive scale and afford employment to large numbers of the inhabitants; there are nine establishments for the manufacture of malleable iron. These branches of the iron trade are considerably on the increase in the neighbourhood. The manufacture of iron tubes is carried on very extensively by the Caledonian Patent Lap-welded Tube Company; Messrs. A. & J. Stewart, of the Clyde Tube Works; Mr. Jas. Allan; The Sun Tube Company; and some others. There are also several extensive engineering and iron founding establishments; the largest of which is Messrs. Lamberton & Co., Sunnyside Engine Works. The Clydesdale, the National, the Royal, and the Union Banks have each a branch located here. There are places of worship for various denominations. In 1871 Coatbridge had a population of 15,802, and in 1881, 19,000.

OLD MONKLAND is a parish divided into three districts for registration purposes, and extends from the right bank of the Clyde to the border of New Monkland, a distance of between seven and eight miles, by a breadth near the Clyde of little more than one, but afterwards expanding to nearly four miles. It is bounded on the north by Calder and the barony parish of Glasgow, and on the south by Bothwell. This is one of the most productive parishes in Lanarkshire; it is well enclosed, cultivated, and until commerce, that sore destroyer of sylvan beauty, made such rapid strides, was one of the most beautiful and finely planted in the county. At Tolcross, are situated the Clyde Iron Works, and extensive collieries, the property of Colin Dunlop, Esq. The whole of this parish is rich in minerals. DUNDYVAN is a village in this parish. The area of Old Monkland parish is 10,985 acres, and in 1871 its population was 34,073, and in 1881, 37,315.

WHIFFLET is a village in the parish of Old Monkland, having a station on the Caledonian Railway, one mile distant from Coatbridge, and one on the North British line. There are engineering, bolt and rivet, and agricultural implement works in the immediate neighbourhood. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a Free church.

BAILLIESTON is a large village in the parish (parochial) of Old Monkland, from which it has been disjoined for ecclesiastical purposes, and erected into a parish, quoad sacra, under the name of Crossna; it is situated three miles and a half from Coatbridge, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, and contains places of worship for the Establishment, the United Presbyterian, the Episcopal church, Free church, and Roman Catholic.

CALDER or CADDIE parish extends along the northern boundary of Lanarkshire, having Kirkintilloch and New Monkland on the east, New Kilpatrick on the west, Campsie on the north, and the barony parish of Glasgow on the south. Great improvements have been made in this district in agriculture. This progressive benefit has been accelerated by the great canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which passes through the parish for five miles, whilst the river Kelvin washes its northern boundary to the extent of six miles. The North British and Caledonian Railways pass through this parish. The discovery of coal on the estate of Calder, and coal and very valuable fire-clay on that of Garnkirk, has materially enhanced the price of land. CHRYSTON, MURHEAD, BISHOP BRIGGS and MOODIESBURN are small villages in this parish, which encloses an area of 13,969 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 6,464.

GARNKIRK, in the parish of Calder, is situated on the Caledonian Railway, about six miles from Glasgow, and three and a half from Coatbridge; this place is important from the Garnkirk Fire Clay Works being situated here. This is perhaps the largest and most complete manufactory of fire-clay in Great Britain. There are about 500 men employed in mining and manufacturing the material. The quality of the fire-clay on this property is quite equal to that of Stou-bridge, and the bricks, furnace blocks, retorts and crucibles find their way in large quantities to all parts of America, Germany, Holland and Russia. The manufacture of glazed pipes for water and sanitary purposes and of ornamental articles, such as chimney caws, vases and fountains, is also extensively carried on at this establishment. There are likewise two other extensive establishments engaged in the manufacture of articles as above described, viz: Messrs. John Young and Sons, at Cardowan and Heathfield, and Mr. James Binnie, at Gartcosh. Population in 1871, 656.

GLENBOIG (or Garnqueen) is a village, about 2½ miles north from Coatbridge, and a station on the Caledonian Railway. Here at the Glenboig Works and at the Star Fire Brick Works, fire-clay and fire-bricks are extensively manufactured. Fire-bricks are also manufactured at Gartverrie, one mile distant, and in this vicinity coal is also plentifully obtained. At Robroyston, Sir William Wallace was betrayed into the power of Edward I. by Sir John Monteith, who, according to tradition, was bribed for that purpose by the English Court. Population in 1871, 237.

DOUGLAS AND RIGSIDE.

DOUGLAS, a village of great antiquity, is 41 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 81 s.s.e. from Glasgow, 15 n. from Leadhills, 12 s. from Lanark, and 8 s. from Lesmahago; situated nearly in the centre of the parish of its name, on the south side of the Douglas water, and on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. The parish of Douglas takes its name from the stream that flows through it—the British words Dhu Glas, signifying the "dark blue stream," and this is descriptive of the colour of the water. From such an etymology is derived the once dreaded and still noble name of Douglas (of this ancient family copious and interesting particulars will be found in Messrs. Chambers' "Gazetteer"). In the vicinity of the village, on the bank of the river, stands Douglas Castle, the residence of Earl Home, surrounded by extensive plantations. The old castle of Douglas was burned down in 1760; the following year the present edifice was begun to be erected in a magnificent style, from a plan by the late architect, Adam, but only a part of the original splendid design has as yet been completed. The village consists of several narrow irregular streets, formed without any regard to order on uneven ground. Near the centre, in the village burial place, stands all that remains of the ancient parish church; in a vault belonging to the original structure are to be seen monuments of some of the great chiefs of the house of Douglas; several of these highly merit the investigation of the curious in sepulchral sculpture. Besides the parish church, there is a Free church, an United Presbyterian, and a number of schools. The village is well lighted with gas. The inhabitants in general are employed in handloom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland have each a branch establishment here. The parish throughout is well stored with limestone, freestone, and coal; of the latter mineral there are extensive seams, many of which are seven feet thick. The district is well watered; besides the Douglas there are three minor streams, which merge in that river previous to its falling into the Clyde, about seven miles below the village. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Friday in March, the first Friday after Whitsuntide, the third Friday in October, and the first Friday after Martinmas for hiring servants; the second Wednesday in June, for shearers; and the second Friday in August, for horses, of which there is always a large show. The parish, which embraces an area of 24,137 statute acres, had in 1871 a population numbering 2,624, and in 1881, 2,648, of which the town contained about 1,368.

RIGSIDE is a small village in the parish of Douglas, four miles north therefrom, situated on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. In its neighbourhood are several collieries, which are worked by James Swann, Esq., of Collier Hall. It also abounds with rich and productive beds of ironstone, limestone and fire-clay.

HAMILTON,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BOTHWELL AND DALSERF, AND THE VILLAGES OF AYR ROAD, LARKHALL, NETHERBURN, QUARTER, UDDINGSTON, FALLSIDE, GREENFIELD AND BURNBANK.

HAMILTON is an ancient town, royal burgh, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the middle ward of the county; 87 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 10½ s.w. from Glasgow, 15 n.w. from Lanark, 8 s. from Airdrie, and 7 n. from Strathaven; it occupies an eligible site on the road betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, and Edinburgh and Ayr, and a pleasant situation in a highly cultivated county, washed by the Clyde and the Avon. The town lies along the base of a rising ground, extending nearly a mile in length, and consists of several streets of substantial, well built houses, not very regularly disposed, but handsome in appearance, and the whole town has an air of comfort, respectability and activity. Of late years many improvements have been effected in the town and neighbourhood, and it is rapidly increasing in population and importance. A line of street has been opened through the town, forming part of the London road; a bridge called Caldwell bridge has been thrown across the ravine, thereby avoiding the lower part of the old town, and two lines of railway have been laid down from Glasgow, which has proved the means of opening the vast mineral field in the neighbourhood of Hamilton. Among the public buildings will be recognised the handsome Town Hall, in the form of a Roman temple, with appropriate offices and a gaol. The town is well lighted with gas, and there are works for supplying the inhabitants with water. The moderate distance of Hamilton from Glasgow has facilitated the introduction of weaving cotton goods to a large amount; the lace trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and the prosperity of this business has been greatly augmented by improvements. There are six banking establishments properly settled in this burgh, viz., branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. In the fifteenth century Lord Hamilton created the town into a burgh of barony. Queen Mary created it into a royal burgh in 1543, but after the Reformation the rights and privileges thus acquired from the Crown were resigned into the hands of William, Duke of Hamilton, who, in 1679, restored to the community its former franchises, and created it into a burgh of regality dependent on him and his successors. The government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three bailies, and nine councillors; and in connection with Lanark, Airdrie, Falkirk and Linlithgow, it sends a representative to Parliament. The justices of peace hold regular courts for the trial of minor offences. The places of worship are churches of the Establishment, Free, United Presbyterian and Episcopal churches, and Independent and Roman Catholic chapels. The old parish church was made collegiate in 1551, by Sir James Hamilton, for a provost and prebendary, and has always been the place of sepulchre of that family. The great objects of attraction in this part of Lanarkshire is the palace of the Duke of Hamilton and its surrounding pleasure grounds. The building forms three sides of a quadrangle; the rooms are spacious, particularly the picture gallery, which contains the finest collection in Scotland. The pictures, ornaments, &c., belonging to His Grace were disposed of by auction in London in the month of June, 1882. In the middle of the great park, one mile from the town, on a rock overhanging the Avon, stand the ruins of Caldwell Castle, the ancient manor house. The park is well stocked with deer, and bears a number of sycamore oaks. Amongst the charitable institutions of Hamilton are two hospitals for the reception of a certain number of old men, one endowed by the noble family above mentioned, the other by a Mr. James Robertson; there are likewise an orphan school, some friendly societies and a Masonic lodge. In the vicinity, to the west of the town, on the road to Bothwell, are spacious and handsome barracks, and on the banks of the Clyde is an extensive racetrack, on which horse races occasionally take place, and the meetings are noted as among the best attended in Scotland. The parish of Hamilton, which embraces 11,243 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 16,808, and in 1881 26,238; the parliamentary burgh contained 13,997 inhabitants. QUARTER is a small village in Hamilton parish, two miles distant from that town. The weekly market for Hamilton is held on Friday. The hiring and cattle markets are held on the third Friday in April and the third Friday in October; and the annual cattle show about the beginning of June. Population, 18,519.

BOTHWELL is an ancient village, in the parish of its name, situated on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, between eight and nine miles from the former, and between two and three from the latter town. The Caledonian and North British railways each have a station here. The parish is about eight miles and a half long by four broad, the great roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and from Glasgow to Carlisle, pass through it; and beside the river Clyde, it is intersected by the two Calders, which are beautifully skirted with wood. Throughout the parish coal is found in abundance, and several collieries are in full operation. Near the village, towards the west, on the side of the Clyde, is the modern mansion of Baron Douglas of Douglas, and Earl of Home, standing in the midst of shrubberies and plantations; contiguous to which, on an eminence, is the magnificent ruin of Bothwell Castle, once an important Scottish fortress, much admired by all visitors. About half a mile from the town is the Glasgow District Asylum, formerly conducted as a private asylum under Dr. Dean Fairless. The institution was bought by the Glasgow District Board of Lunacy in 1878, and after undergoing extensive alterations, was opened in 1881, as a district asylum for pauper patients, and contains over two hundred beds. The road to Hamilton is carried over the Clyde by means of Bothwell Bridge, a name famous in Scottish history from this being the spot on which the Duke of Monmouth routed a formidable army of Covenanters, on the 22nd of June, 1679. The ancient church of Bothwell was founded by Archibald "The Grim," Earl of Douglas, in 1305, with liberal endowment for a provost and eight prebendaries. An elegant church was erected by the heritors of this parish; it is in the Gothic style, and exhibits a fine appearance as seen on approaching the village from Hamilton. There is a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, here, and a board school and private academies. The area of Bothwell parish is 13,614 acres, and its population in 1881 was 7,590, of which number Bothwell village contained 1,535.

DALSERF is a parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, on the west bank of the Clyde; its greatest length is 6½ miles, and its greatest breadth 4½. The soil is generally fertile and well cultivated, and coal is found in abundance. The only village deserving notice in the parish is LARKHALL, three miles from Hamilton, on the great road from Glasgow to Carlisle. In this village many looms are employed in the weaving of fancy fabrics for Glasgow houses; and the large bleach works of Mr. David Crawford Miller are situated here, giving employment to a large number of hands; altogether the parish has every appearance of prosperity. Dalsersf parish embraces 6,551 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 7,341, and in 1881 9,376; of the latter number Larkhall contained 6,742.

UDDINGSTON is a thriving village in the parish of Bothwell, four miles north west from Hamilton. The road from Glasgow to Carlisle passes through the village; and it has a station on the Caledonian and also on the North British Railway. There are iron foundries and establishments for the manufacture of agricultural implements. The village is lighted with gas, and presents an appearance of neatness and good order. The places of worship are Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches, one of each. There are also two public and two private schools, and a branch of the Bank of Scotland. Population of Uddingston in 1871, 1,997, and in 1881, 3,549.

FALLSIDE is a hamlet in the parish of Bothwell, about one mile north-east from and in the postal district of Bothwell village, and has a station on the Caledonian Railway.

HOLYTOWN AND BELLSHILL,

WITH GREENHILL, MOSSEND, NEWHOUSE, SALSBURG, TILLINGBURN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HOLYTOWN is an extensive village and quoad sacra parish, disjoined and formed into a separate ecclesiastical district, though still rated in the parish of Bothwell for parochial purposes; it is also in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, and ten miles east from Glasgow. The village derives its chief support from the extensive collieries in the neighbourhood, and the Mossend Iron Company's, the Clydesdale Iron Company's and Messrs. Aiton and Company's works, which give employment to a large number of persons. There are places of worship of the Establishment, and also a Board school. A station on the Caledonian Railway is within half a mile of the village. Population in 1891, 1,432.

BELLSHILL is a large and thriving village consisting chiefly of one main street over one mile and a half in length, situated in the parish of Bothwell one mile west from Holytown, on the through road to Glasgow, deriving its chief support from the iron works and numerous collieries in the vicinity. The Caledonian and the North British Railway Companies have each a station here. The Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch here. There are several schools and there are places of worship belonging to the Established church, Free church, United Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Evangelical Union and Primitive Methodists.

NEWHOUSE is a hamlet two miles east from Holytown.

GREENHILL is a small village about four miles east from Holytown and one from Omoa station. There are extensive collieries in the neighbourhood, and half a mile distant are the extensive quarries of Messrs. Gibb, M'Intyre and Ancell. There is also a Board school.

SALSBURG, Saltysburg or Salzburg, is a village in the parish of SHOTTS, five miles east and in the postal district of Holytown. The Coltness Iron Company have several collieries in the district. The Original Secessionists have a place of worship near here. Population in 1871, 553.

TILLINGBURN is a hamlet near to the village of Greenhill and about for miles east from Holytown and two miles from Omoa station, on the Cleland and Mid-Calder branch of the Caledonian Railway. The works of Mr. James Munro, artificial manure manufacturer, are situated in this hamlet.

POST OFFICE, HOLYTOWN, Jeanie Rodger, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at fifteen minutes past seven morning (from Motherwell) at fifteen minutes past one afternoon and from all parts (from Glasgow) at half-past five evening; and are despatched to all parts (by Glasgow) at ten minutes past six morning and twelve minutes past twelve noon, and to Glasgow and Motherwell at half-past four and seven evening.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, HOLYTOWN STATION, Maggie Forsyth, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from all parts (via Glasgow) at half-past six and seven morning, and seven minutes past five afternoon, and are despatched thereto at seven morning, twelve noon and five afternoon.

Telegraph Office.

The nearest Money Order Office is at HOLYTOWN.

Post Office, BELLSHILL, Andrew Forsyth, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at eight morning and six evening, and are despatched to all parts (by Glasgow) at twenty minutes to six morning and twenty minutes past twelve afternoon, and to Glasgow and Motherwell at twenty minutes past four evening.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, SALSBURG, Thomas Paris, Post Master.—Letters arrive from all parts (via Holytown) at eleven morning, and are despatched thereto at five minutes to three afternoon.

KILBRIDE (EAST),

CARMUNNOCK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILBRIDE is a market village and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Muirkirk, eight miles from the former city, the like distance N. from Strathaven, between six and seven S.W. from Hamilton, and forty-five W. by S. from Edinburgh. The parish, which comprehends the abrogated one of Torrance, contains some extensive limeworks, and coal also lies beneath the surface. The places of worship are the parish kirk, the United Presbyterian church, and the Free kirk. Kilbride has produced several eminent men, among whom are found Dr. William Hunter, and his brother, Mr John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist and physiologist. There are two good schools—the Board school in Kilbride, and one at Maxwellton, a short distance from the town, the latter being endowed by the late Sir Hugh Maxwell, Baronet, of Calderwood Castle. A market is entitled to be holden here on Monday. The cattle show, which is held on the second Friday in June for Clydesdale horses and Ayrshire cattle, is the only fair that takes place in East Kilbride. East Kilbride parish, which embraces 22,760 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 3,861, and in 1881, 9,975. The parish of CARMUNNOCK lies on the north-western confines of the county, on the east bank of the White Cart river, having Kilbride on the south and Cambuslang on the east; it is four miles in length by three in breadth. The ground is partly arable and partly pastoral, the banks of the Cart presenting some fine woodland scenery. On the estate of Castlemilk (the proprietors of which are supposed to be lineal descendants of the Royal House of Stuart), are the remains of a Roman military road; and many tumuli have been met with, which when opened have always been found to contain human bones and instruments of war. In the house of Cast milk, which is noted for its fine situation, Mary Queen of Scots is said to have lodged the night before the battle of Langside. There is a place of worship for the members of the Established church, and a Board school. The parish supports its own poor by voluntary assessment; acreage, 3,479; population of the parish in 1871, 702, and in 1881, 772.

LANARK,

WITH NEW LANARK, KIRKFIELD BANK, THE PARISH OF CARMICHAEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANARK is a royal burgh, market town, the capital of the county and parish to which it gives name, and the seat of a presbytery; 82 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 25 s.e. from Glasgow, 15 s.e. from Hamilton, and 11 n.w. from Biggar; situate on the main road from Stirling to Carlisle, and one mile above the left or east bank of the Clyde, and from whence there is a branch of the Caledonian railway, communicating with the main line at Carstairs Junction. It is a place of great antiquity, and is the spot where the first assembly of Parliament mentioned in the history of Scotland was convened by Kenneth III. in the year 978. It is said to have received its original charter from Alexander I., and it is certain that it was a royal town as early at least as Malcolm IV. Many of the ancient Scottish kings made Lanark, or Lanerik, their residence; and at one period there stood a castle on an apparently artificial mound at the bottom of the present Castlegate, the summit of which elevation is now converted into a bowling-green. Lanark possesses interest as having been the scene of the first decisive military enterprise of the celebrated Sir William Wallace, that patriot having commenced his glorious though personally unfortunate career by the defeat and death of William de Heselrig, the English sheriff of Lanarkshire, in 1293. We are told that Wallace having married a lady of the name of Braidfoot, the beirress of Lamington, resided with her privately at Lanark; that while there, he, with a few friends, had a quarrel and conflict with some officers of the English garrison. The party of Wallace being overpowered by numbers, he made his escape to Cartlane Craig, on which the sheriff seized on his wife and put her to death. To revenge this barbarous atrocity Wallace and his friends attacked the sheriff in the night, and massacred him with two hundred and forty Englishmen. Bruce finally recovered Lanark from the English rule in 1310. The present town is principally composed of one line of streets, descending from east to west, bearing the respective names of High street, Bloomgate, Westport, Wellgate, and Hope street; the latter, leading northwards, contains the County Buildings; besides these, there are smaller streets diverging, and several lanes and closes. The main line contains many good stone buildings of respectable appearance, and well furnished shops, the whole being suitably lighted with gas by the Lanark Gas Consumers' Co. Limited. The Lanarkshire Advertiser, a highly respectable newspaper, is published here weekly by the enterprising firm of Messrs. Baird & Hamilton, and is ably edited, and has a very extensive circulation. The general occupation of the inhabitants is hand loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers; nail making is carried on to some extent. There are also two breweries, four branch banks and several good inns. There are also barracks for the county militia. Within a short distance of the town the British Oil and Candle Co. Limited, have in full operation works for distilling and refining paraffin oil, and the manufacture of candles, grease, &c.; and close by the railway station is the fancy wood work establishment of Messrs. Archibald Brown & Co., where a great variety of fancy articles are manufactured from wood, and tastefully ornamented in tartan and various other patterns. This business was established here in 1836, and gives employment to about 100 hands; at the head of the Wellgate, and only a couple of minutes' walk from the station, are two very fine auction marts owned respectively by Messrs. Lawrie & Symington, and Messrs. J. & J. Marshall, at which are held the largest sales of live stock in the South of Scotland. Behind the Clydesdale Hotel are the Assembly Rooms, erected in 1827, on the site of which stood an ancient monastery of Franciscans. The County Buildings, erected in 1836, at an expense of upwards of £5,000, are situated in Hope street, and are a great ornament to that part of the town; they are in the Grecian style of architecture with a noble front of free-stone, and comprise commodious court rooms and appropriate offices. The gaol is situated at the rear of the court house. As a royal burgh, whose charters were finally confirmed by Charles I. in 1632, it is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer and nine councillors; it unites with Falkirk, Hamilton, Linlithgow and Airdrie in returning one member to Parliament. The sheriff's court is held in the County Buildings every Monday and Thursday during the session, a justice of peace court and one for the burgh as required, and general county meetings take place in the same edifice on the last day of April and the 29th of September. The places of worship consist of the parish church, which stands in the centre of the main street, and a quoad sacra church at St. Leonard's, a church of England in Hope street, two for United Presbyterians, a Free church and a Roman Catholic chapel. In a niche over the eastern door of the parish church is placed the colossal statue of Wallace, executed and presented to the town by Forrest, a self-taught genius. The remains of the old parish church, which are situated at a distance of half a mile from the town, have been deserted for more than eighty years; tradition asserts that in this structure, at public worship, the heroic Wallace first saw his subsequently murdered wife. In the cemetery which surrounds the church was interred William Lithgow, a celebrated and eccentric traveller of the reign of James VI.; after his peregrination through a great portion of Europe and Asia, he came home miserably mutilated and disfigured by the inquisition, and settled in his native parish till his death. The principal educational institutions are the Grammar school, supported by the corporation, and Wilson's Free school, endowed by a lady of that name, in the year 1818, for the education of twenty-five boys and the like number of girls. Lanark has ever possessed considerable attractions to the visitor and the tourist, from the beautiful undulating scenery and the romantic grounds at Bonnington, and the Falls of Clyde; these are the Falls of Corra, where the water takes three distinct leaps, making altogether eighty-four feet; Bonnington fall, a little further on, and a third at Stonebyres, about two miles below the town. About a mile to the north of the town is a very old arch, supposed to have been erected either by the Picts or the Romans. A fine view of Cartlane bridge, erected in 1822, is obtained here, and Cartlane Craggs, a deep and rugged chasm, evidently formed by a convulsion of nature, will be an interesting object to the visitor. The neighbourhood of Lanark is adorned with many mansions of the nobility and gentry; and at Lee Castle, the seat of Sir Simon McDonald Lockhart, Bart. who is the principal land owner in the parish, is to be seen the curious stone called the "Lee Penny," which is said to have suggested to the late Sir Walter Scott the idea of his celebrated novel, the "Talisman." Horse races are now held on an extensive and excellent course about a mile and a half east of the town. The town is well drained and has now got an abundant supply of water, which has been brought from the Tinto range of hills, a distance of seven miles. In the vicinity is a handsome sheet of water called Lanark Loch; its margins have been embanked and planted, and an excellent footway formed close by the water's edge, rendering it an attractive and delightful promenade, much frequented by the inhabitants. The market day is Tuesday; fairs, the last Wednesday of April, May and July (old style), the Thursday after the second Monday of October, and the first Wednesday of November (old style), all for cattle and horses, and lambs in the season. The population of the parish, the area of which is 10,383 statute acres, was in 1871, 7,811 and in 1881, 7,579; and that of the burgh, 4,908. The parish is in the southern division of the county, which sends one member to Parliament, the present representative being John G. C. Hamilton, Esq. of Dalziel.

NEW LANARK is a very neat, regular, and well-built village, about one mile south from Lanark, on the same side of the Clyde as that town. It was founded by Mr. Dale, in 1733, that enterprising gentleman having erected the first of the present range of cotton mills, and constructed a subterranean aqueduct, about one hundred yards in length, through the solid rock, by which means he brought the waters of the Clyde on to the sloping plain in which the mills and the village now stand. The late great and by many considered mistaken philanthropist, Owen, was long a principal proprietor of these extensive mills. The works were sold in the spring of 1881, and the new proprietors have been busily engaged in introducing the most improved machinery and also in extending the works to double their former size. The population of the village in 1871, was 972, and in 1881, 706.

KIRKFIELD BANK is a handsome village in the parish of Lesmahagow, situated on the left bank of the Clyde, about a mile and a half from Lanark. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving. A steam loom factory is also in operation, and employs a number of hands. The scenery in this part of the neighbourhood is very romantic, and frequented by many visitors. There is an established church and a Board school in the village. Population in 1871, 368.

CARRMICHAEL is a parish about four miles south of Lanark. The principal landowners are the Earl of Home, Sir Windham C. J. C. Anstruther, Bart. and Morris T. Carmichael, Esq. There is a church and Board school in the parish. Acreage of the parish 11,314; population in 1871, 708, and in 1881, 720.

LEADHILLS.

CRAWFORD, CRAWFORD-JOHN AND ABINGTON.

LEADHILLS is a village in the parish of Crawford, 46 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 44 s. from Glasgow, 15 from Douglas, and 16 n. from Thorahill, situate in the alpine region, amidst a wilderness of dismal, heathy mountains, on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries. It derives its name from being the residence of workmen employed in the lead mines, which are the most valuable in Scotland, and perhaps in Britain. The mines, which are farmed by a company from the Earl of Hopetoun, have produced in some years 18,000 bars, of nine stone (avoirdupois) the bar; in the year 1809, 25,200 bars were produced; which at £32 per ton (the then price) amounted to £45,360; the ore dug from these mines affords a very liberal proportion of silver. Gold was found in the sand of the mountains at an early period; during the reign of James VI. of Scotland, Sir Bevis Bulmer, a German, by order of Queen Elizabeth, was sent to collect gold dust in the waters of Elvin and Glengonar, with which they were said to abound; he had a house at Wanlockhead, where he deposited the fruits of his labour. The attempt was revived by the late Lord Hopetoun, but soon discontinued, as the product was inadequate to the expense. The miners of Leadhills, during their spare hours, collected 1,000 grains of gold in 1881, and presented it to the Earl of Hopetoun, lord of the manor, on the attainment of his majority. It was at Leadhills that Allan Ramsay, the poet, was born and spent his earliest years. In the village is a good inn, the Hopetoun Arms. Fairs are held on the second Friday of June and the last Friday of October. In 1871 the village contained 1,033; and in 1881, 1,065 inhabitants.

CRAWFORD is a small village in the parish of its name, 8 miles from Leadhills, situate on the main road between Glasgow and Carlisle; it contains a good inn and the parish church, a splendid new building, erected in 1874. The name is said to be derived from the British compound Craw-ford, signifying the "passage" or the "road of blood;" an appellation supposed to have been obtained from this locality having been the scene of some bloody contest between the people of the country and their Roman invaders. The parish embraces an area of 65,407 acres. Population in 1881, 698.

CRAWFORD-JOHN is a parish in the upper part of Clydesdale, contiguous to the foregoing parish, and on the east of Muirkirk and Douglas. The small river named Duoneaton Water takes its rise at the head of this district. On the top of Netherton Hill are the vestiges of an extensive encampment, and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of two ancient castles. The village, which is small, is situated about a mile and a half south-west of the main road, and about six miles north of Leadhills; it contains a parish church and school, and also a Free church; the country around is rich in beautiful, bold, and varied scenery, with lofty hills and flowing streams. In the village are two respectable inns, the Crown and the Colebrooke Arms, and there is also a good library. The acreage of the parish is 26,357, and its population was, in 1871, 833, and in 1881, 843.

ABINGTON is a small village in the parish of Crawford-John, from which place it is six miles distant, and is a station on the Caledonian Railway. The only thing worthy of notice here is Abington House, the residence of Sir Thomas Edward Colebrooke, M.P.; there is a Free church, a good inn, and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited.

LESMAHAGOW,

ABBEY GREEN, CROSSFORD, KIRKMUIRHILL, BLACKWOOD, BOGHEAD, AUCHENHEATH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LESMAHAGOW is a parish, the village, called ABBEY GREEN, being situated on the river Nethan, one of the tributaries of the Clyde, and in the upper ward of Lanarkshire. It is a beautiful village, in almost the centre of the parish, 38 miles w. from Edinburgh, 23 s.e. from Glasgow, and 6 s.w. from Lanark. It takes its name from the old abbey, taken down at the beginning of the present century, and an Established church was erected on its site by the heritors of the parish in 1803. The old abbey was founded by David I. in the year 1140, and dedicated by him to St. Machute. An annual fair was formerly held on the 15th of November, at Abbey Green, entitled St. Machute's Fair, but this is now discontinued. The parish of Lesmahagow is very extensive, being twelve miles square, and is one of the richest in minerals in Scotland. The gas coal at AUCHENHEATH, which has been worked for upwards of one hundred years, is well known, and shipped in large quantities. Ironstone, limestone, and freestone are also worked in abundance. In obtaining and working these minerals a considerable number of the inhabitants find employment; whilst many other are occupied in weaving for Glasgow manufacturers. The transit of the minerals is facilitated by means of a railway, which, south of Lesmahagow, is for mineral traffic only; it passes through, or near most of the mines, and joins the Caledonian line at Motherwell. The British Linen Co. Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland, have branches here. Abbey Green village contains three comfortable inns, the Abbey Green, the Commercial, and the Masons' Arms, all of which are posting houses. Besides the parish church, there is a Free church and a Reformed Presbyterian chapel, and some well-conducted schools.

The noble ruins of Craig Nethan, or Dauphane Castle, the property of the Earl of Home, of Douglas, are well deserving the notice of the tourist. A room is still shown, where, it is said, the unfortunate Queen Mary, took refuge after her escape from Lochlen Castle. There are two hiring fairs held, and two others for general business, during the year. In the month of December are three market days, known as Big Wednesdays. The parish of Lesmahagow embraces an area of 41,299 statute acres, and contained in 1871 a population of 8,709, and in 1881 had increased to 9,948.

CROSSFORD is a village situated in a beautiful valley on the left bank of the river Clyde, near the confluence of the Nethan and that river. A very fine hotel has recently been built here for the convenience of tourists visiting the district, which is noted for beautiful scenery. It is about 5 miles s. by e. from Abbey Green, and 4½ miles n.w. from Lanark. There is a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and a public school.

KIRKMUIRHILL and BLACKWOOD are villages adjacent to each other, about three miles n.w. from Abbey Green, on the Glasgow road. There is a commodious public school and railway station at the latter place, and an United Presbyterian church at the former. BOGHEAD is a small village about 1½ mile distant from Kirkmuirhill. AUCHENHEATH, a mining village and a railway station, is about 2½ miles north from Abbey Green. Populations in 1881: Crossford, 816; Kirkmuirhill, 593; Auchenheath, 580.

MOTHERWELL,

CRAIGNEUK, CARFIN, NEWARTHILL, NEW STEVENSTON, OMOA, AND CLELAND.

MOTHERWELL is a police burgh and post town, situated for the greater part in the parish of Dalziel, and middle ward of Lanarkshire, two miles from Hamilton, and eleven from Glasgow. Within the recollection of persons still living, Motherwell had no existence as a village. Its name is derived from three farms, called respectively High, Low, and North Motherwell, and these doubtless receive their designation from an adjoining spring called Ladywell or Motherswell. Within the last few years the progress of Motherwell has been very rapid. It owes its prosperity in a great extent to the coal mines in its neighbourhood. The Glasgow Iron Company's Works, the largest in Scotland, employ 1,000 workmen. There are four places of worship—the Parish church of Dalziel, a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and a Primitive Methodist chapel. There are also branches of the Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. The town is supplied with water from the Clyde, and the streets are lighted with gas. Motherwell is a principal station and junction on the Caledonian Railway. In 1871 the parish of Dalziel contained a population of 9,175, of which number Motherwell had 6,943; in 1881 the numbers were—for the parish, 13,862; for the town, 12,915.

CARFIN is a small village in the parish of Bothwell, one mile distant from and in the post delivery of Motherwell. Several collieries, a boiler works, and also a chemical works are in the district, and there is also a station on the Caledonian Railway. Population in 1871, 111, and in 1881, 290.

NEWARTHILL is a village also in the parish of Bothwell, postal delivery of Motherwell, about two miles and a half distant. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here. Population in 1871, 1,530, and in 1881, 1,200.

NEW STEVENSTON is a village in the parish of Bothwell, half mile distant from Holytown. There is a Free church here.

OMOA is a village in the parish of Shotts and postal delivery of Motherwell, about three miles distant therefrom, and a station on the Caledonian Railway. Several collieries and engineering and boiler works, two stone quarries and two brick works are the main support of the district.

CLELAND is a large village in the parish of Shotts, and postal delivery of Motherwell, from which place it is three and a half miles distant. There are a church of the Establishment, a Free church and a Board school here.

RUTHERGLEN,

OR RUGLEN, as it is commonly called, is an ancient royal burgh in the parish of its name, situate on the line of the Clydesdale Junction Railway, two miles and a half south-east from Glasgow, and nine west from Hamilton. The town consists of one principal street with several smaller ones branching from it; in its vicinity collieries are wrought, and chemical and dye works are in operation. There are a few large factories, a paper mill, a pottery, tube works, and a ship building yard, which give employment to a large number of the inhabitants. The places of worship are an Established church, a quoad sacra church, an United Presbyterian church, two Free churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and one for the Wesleyan Methodists; there are also several excellent schools, and an extensive circulating library. The Town Hall, erected in Main street, at a cost of nearly seven thousand pounds, is a handsome and spacious structure, with a large square tower faced with three clocks. This fine building can be seen at a great distance, and adds very much to the appearance of the town. Rutherglen was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1126, by King David I.; by his charter the inhabitants enjoyed many privileges. At that period, small crafts came up the Clyde to Rutherglen quay. Glasgow, however, by its superior consequence, arising from its trade and manufactures, absorbed the privileges and engrossed the traffic of this burgh, and the Broomielaw has for years been the station of almost all external commerce. The castle of Rutherglen (which stood in Castle street, but of which not a trace now remains) underwent several sieges during the wars of King Robert, and it remained a place of strength until the battle of Langside, soon after which the Regent Murray, to revenge himself on the Hamilton family, in whose custody it then was, ordered it to be destroyed. It was in the old church of Rutherglen, that, in the year 1291, Sir John Monteith engaged to betray to the English his friend and companion, Sir William Wallace. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and fifteen councillors; a monthly court is held; it unites with Dumbarton, Kilmarnock, Port Glasgow and Renfrew in sending a representative to the legislature. Kilmarnock is the returning burgh. Rutherglen gives the title of earl to the Marquis of Queensferry. The fairs of this town have been noted for a great show of horses, particularly of the Lanarkshire breed, esteemed the best for draught in Scotland; they are held on the first Friday after the fourth of May; first Tuesday after the fourth of June; and first Friday after the twenty-fifth of August; first Wednesday and Friday and the Friday after the twenty-fifth of November. The parish of Rutherglen, which covers an area of 2,151 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 10,766, and in 1881, 12,300, the royal burgh at the same time being 11,200.

POST OFFICE, 131 Main Street, RUTHERGLEN, Lewis Mitchell, Post Master.—Letters arrive from all parts (from Glasgow) at seven morning and half-past twelve and half-past four afternoon, a quarter-past six and fifty minutes past seven evening, and are despatched to Glasgow at fifty-five minutes past nine morning, five minutes past one and ten minutes past four afternoon, and forty minutes past five (South Mail only) and thirty-five minutes past seven evening.

STRATHAVEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF GLASSFORD & STONEHOUSE, & THE VILLAGES OF WEST QUARTER & CHAPELTON.

STRATHAVEN is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Avondale, 44 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 15 S. by E. from Glasgow, 28 N.E. from Ayr, 21 E. by N. from Kilmarnock, 14 W. from Lanark, and 7½ from Hamilton, situate on the river Avon. The town is of considerable antiquity, but possesses no pretensions to elegance in its dwellings, or uniformity in the arrangement of them. Like many other towns, not only in the British islands, but throughout the European continent, it seems to have been indebted for its origin to the feudal era, when every chieftain had his castle or fortress, for safety or aggression; the ruins of one of these frowning edifices, presenting "shattered and haggard walls," stands on an eminence to the south, overhanging Strathaven. The excellent breed of horses for which Lanarkshire is so much distinguished was introduced to this vicinity upwards of a century ago, by a Duke of Hamilton, who brought some fine horses from Holstein, and placed them in the parks attached to the castle; from this origin, the race of draught cattle was propagated over the entire district. The offspring of the cow has also conferred distinction on this town. The herbage of the neighbourhood is supposed to be of a highly nutritious quality, and peculiarly adapted for the improvement of the flesh and milk of cattle; in consequence of this Strathaven has long been held in high estimation, and a Strathven calf is not unfrequently sold at almost as high a price as a cow reared on a less favoured pasture. Strathaven is not a place of much trade; the most prominent branches are cheese and grain dealing, and the weaving of silk and cotton goods; there are two or three respectable inns and posting houses, and three branch banking establishments. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in the year 1450, in favour of the then powerful chief, William Earl of Douglas, and is governed by a baron bailie. Besides the National church, there are three United Presbyterian churches, a Free church, an United Associate Synod meeting-house, and a chapel for Independents. A well-built and commodious school has been built by the School Board. On the south side of the river Avon a Roman road can be distinctly traced for several miles. The market, which is held on Thursday, is well attended; fairs are held on the first Thursdays in January, March, and April for cattle and hiring servants; Thursday in Whitsun week, the last Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August, and (the old fair) on the 2nd of November. The parish of Avondale embraces an area of 37,533 statute acres. In 1871 the town of Strathaven had a population of 3,645, and in 1881, 8,812.

GLASSFORD is a parish of 6,442 acres, in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the road between Kilbride and Strathaven. There are two villages in the parish named WEST QUARTER and CHAPELTON; at the former is the parish church and school, and at the latter a Free church and school and an Established church. Population in 1871, 1,490.

STONEHOUSE is a parish and village in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, situate on the south side of the Avon, eight miles south-east from Hamilton. The inhabitants of the village are mostly engaged in hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers, and mining. There are places of worship for members of the Establishment, the Free and the United Presbyterian churches. The village contains three schools, which are well attended. Acreage of the parish, 6,241; population in 1871, 3,177.

WISHAW,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BENHAR, BONKLE, CAMBUSNETHAN, CHAPEL, DYKEHEAD, HARTHILL, MORNINGSIDE NEW MAINS, OVERTOWN, SHOTTS, STANE, WATERLOO AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WISHAW is a police burgh and an endowed parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, 11 miles S.E. from Glasgow, and 32 miles W. from Edinburgh. Wishaw formerly formed part of the parish of Cambusnethan, from which it has been disjoined as an ecclesiastical division, though it still forms part of the parish for parochial purposes. It was made a burgh under the Scotch Police Act of 1850, and is governed under that Act by three magistrates and nine commissioners. It has recently been extended, and now includes within its limits the village of CAMBUSNETHAN. The town is pleasantly situated on the face of a hill, and is formed of several spacious streets, Main street being the principal one. The shops are well stocked, and would do credit to towns of greater pretensions. A police court is held at the Town Hall on occasion requires. The Established church, in Main street, is a neat building, and is ornamented by a spire and clock. There is a Free church, and there are also places of worship for the United and Reformed Presbyterians, Evangelical Unionists, Primitive Methodists, Baptists, and Roman Catholics. The branch banks are the British Linen Company, Clydesdale Bank, Limited, Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. There are several schools, the principal being the Wishaw Academy, the public school, and a public library. About forty years ago, previous to the opening of the district by railway, Wishaw was a place of little importance, but since then, owing to the increased facilities offered for the despatch of the produce of this district, it has advanced with great rapidity. One newspaper is published here. The staple trade of the district is coal, of which mineral there is upwards of one million tons sent from Wishaw annually. Among the establishments which give employment to a great number of workmen are the Wishaw Iron Works, two iron foundries, the fire clay works of Messrs. W. Hudspeth & Co., the distillery of Messrs. J. M. Mackenzie & Co., the malleable iron works of Messrs. John Williams & Co., and the Pather Iron and Steel Co., Limited. The gentlemen's seats in the neighbourhood are numerous—Wishaw Castle, the seat of the late Lord Bellhaven; Allanton House, Sir Henry Seton Stewart, Bart.; Coltness House, James Houldsworth, Esq.; Cambusnethan House, the seat of Major-General Lockhart, c.b.; Garrison Tower, the residence of James Scott, Esq., and Murdostoun Castle, the seat of Robert King Stewart, Esq. About two miles s.w. from the town and near to the Clyde, is an ancient grave yard, the burial place of the Lords of Belhaven and Stenton, and it is said that the original parish church stood upon this site, but no trace of it whatever now remains. In the grave yard stands an elegant memorial tomb of the late Lord Belhaven, who died in 1868. It was erected by his widow, and is a handsome structure of freestone, with tablets of granite on three of its sides, upon one of which are recorded the dates of birth and decease of the late nobleman. The others are inscribed with scriptural texts, &c. It stands about twenty-eight feet in height, and is about twenty feet wide at the base, and is elaborately sculptured throughout. In the graveyard are many memorials, rudely but curiously carved, and denoting considerable antiquity. Amongst them may be noted a headstone with the following inscription:—"Here lies Arthur Inglis, in Netherthoun, who was shot at Stockelton Dyke, by bloody Graham, of Claverhouse, July, 1679, for his adherence to the Work of God and Scotland's covenanted work of Reformation. Rev. XII. 11, erected in the year 1738." The reverse of the stone bears a rhyming epitaph of eight lines. Several of the gravestones bear lengthwise the simple device of a sword. There are also memorials to Sir James Stuart Denham, Bart., and his consort, erected by their son, General Sir James Stuart, Bart. In 1871 the burgh of Wishaw had a population of 8,812, which in 1881 had increased to 13,112.

CAMBUSNETHAN is a parish, the village being about a mile east from Wishaw, with which burgh it is now incorporated. The ancient parish church is situated here, and is surrounded by a burial ground. The former is now an ivy-grown ruin, and has long been disused, but internments still take place in the graveyard, which has been greatly extended and is tastefully kept. The present church, a modern edifice, with square tower, is in close proximity, as are also the Board schools. There is also a Free church in the village. The parish of Cambusnethan embraces an area of 16,603 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 20,326, and in 1881, 20,334 persons.

BONKLE is a village in Cambusnethan parish, situated three miles east from Wishaw. Allanton House, the seat of Sir Henry Seton-Stewart, is in the village. There is an United Presbyterian church here.

MORNINGSIDE is a village in Cambusnethan parish, lying about two miles east from Wishaw. There are stations here upon the North British and Caledonian Railways, and collieries of the Shotts Iron Co., and Morningside Coal Co., and an iron and brass foundry; the manufacture of drain pipes, fire-clay and terra cotta goods is carried on by Messrs. Loudon and Russell, whose works are very extensive. There is a Board school in the village. Population in 1871, 428, and in 1881, 1,150.

CHAPEL is a hamlet adjoining Morningside, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in the adjacent collieries. Population in 1871, 411.

NEW MAINS is a considerable village in Cambusnethan parish, about two miles east from Wishaw, and is a station on the Caledonian line; in it are situated the extensive works of the Coltness Iron Company, who have twelve blast furnaces in operation, producing over 2,000 tons of pig iron weekly. Commodious schools have been erected by the Company for the education of the children of their workpeople. The Coltness Memorial Church has recently been erected by James Houldsworth, Esq., of Coltness, in memory of his eldest son. The village has a neat appearance, the streets being regularly formed; and the inhabitants are supplied with gas by the company. There is also a school for Roman Catholics.

OVERTOWN is a village in the same parish, two miles s.e. from Wishaw, and is a station on the Caledonian line. There is an Established church in the village, and schools maintained by the Coltness Iron Company, also a school for Roman Catholics. Population in 1871, 1,517, and in 1881, 2,055.

SHOTTS is a large and extensive parish, with a station on the Caledonian Railway, 6 miles north from Wishaw, bordering on Stane, and includes the villages of HARTHILL, BENHAR, and DYKEHEAD. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, have a branch at Shotts, and also a sub-branch at Harthill. There is also a fine hotel close to the station. In all the above places coal and iron works are the sole support of the inhabitants. Population of the parish in 1861, 8,353.

STANE is a thriving and populous village about seven miles north from Wishaw, bordering on Shotts. In the village are the extensive works of the Shotts Iron Company, who employ over 2,400 hands. There are places of worship for Evangelical Unionists and Roman Catholics, and there are also Board schools. There is a station on the Caledonian line close to the village, which in 1871 had a population of 814.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE,

OR WEST LOTHIAN. is a small county, of a very irregular figure, lying on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, having Edinburghshire on the east and south-east, Lanarkshire on the south-west, and Stirlingshire on the west. The Brieche and the Almond waters form the boundary line betwixt this county and that of Edinburgh, except Mid-Caldor, where the latter intrudes more than a mile into Linlithgowshire. From east to west (that is, along the shore of the Forth), the county extends sixteen miles; along the south-eastern boundary (or from Queensferry to its most eastern point) it measures about twenty. It comprises an area of 127 square miles, or 81,114 acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—Much that is applicable to the antiquities of and historical events connected with this county has been already sufficiently detailed in the annals of Edinburghshire and the capital—the district having formed at an early period a portion of the province of Lothian possessed by the Anglo-Saxons; some few particulars, more distinctly referable to this county, may, however, be here added. The Gadenii tribe of British people being overrun by the Romans, the latter formed a firm but not permanent settlement in the shire; the subjugated nations of the world had snapped their fetters—they even menaced the extinction of the Roman name; the legions were recalled to avert the catastrophe, and Britain was left exposed to the devastations of her more ferocious neighbours. During the residence of the Romans in West Lothian, which was the outermost part of their conquest in this direction, they gave a site to the wall which they built across the island. No part of Valentia was so well protected by forts. From the station at Cramond, a Roman road proceeded westward, along the shore of the Forth to Carriden, where the wall terminated; and along the seashore were several posts, which, according to old historians, were strengthened by towers. In modern times a variety of urns, coins, and other relics of the Romans have been discovered in the shire. It is understood that after the departure of the Romans, and a good deal later, this part of Lothian became occupied by the Scots-Irish and Northern adventurers, in greater numbers than in that portion now called Edinburghshire.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The aggregate surface of Linlithgowshire is neither flat nor hilly: The most remarkable protuberances form a range running obliquely across the middle of the county. The central and western parts have the most hilly ground, while on the east and south the land is mostly level. The elevations are generally well clothed with verdure and ornamental woods; about one-third of the whole county is either woodland or old pasture, laid down with artificial grasses; and there are more than four-fifths of the shire enclosed. Until the year 1723 there was little improvement in the agriculture of the district; soon after this period, John, Earl of Stair, introduced new and advantageous modes of husbandry, and commenced the cultivation of the cabbage, turnip, and carrot by the plough; the example of this nobleman was beneficially followed by Charles, first Earl of Hopetoun; but both dying, thirty years elapsed before agricultural spirit was again actively displayed. In more recent times, some practical farmers, possessing the advantages of skill and capital, have brought the cultivation of the shire to comparative perfection; and now this rich and lovely district participates in the general improvements of Southern Caledonia. With the exception of Cairnple, in the parish of Torphichen, which rises about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the mountains of this district are not of great altitude, nor are they numerous—Binny Craig and Cocklerue are the only other eminences that attract notice; they are respectively about five hundred feet high.

MINERALS AND MANUFACTURES.—Linlithgowshire contains a store of minerals of the most useful kind. Coal abounds throughout, limestone is equally prevalent, in some parts ironstone is also found in profusion, and the whole surface seems to rest on a bed of sandstone of the finest quality; silver and lead mines were formerly wrought, and there is plenty of marl, potters' clay, brick clay and red chalk. Many places present volcanic appearances, particularly at Dundas Hill, in the parish of Dalmeny, where there is a bold front of basaltic rocks, exhibiting in some instances columns of that character. Of the MANUFACTURES of the shire, salt is the chief article; and there are tanneries, breweries, distilleries and chemical works in the principal towns. The traffic in coal employs a great number of the inhabitants. This county is remarkable for the state of its population, having undergone less increase in its amount within the last twenty years than most other districts, especially those which are more favoured by being the seat of manufactures. Besides this, the circumstance of stagnation, or at least but slow progress in population, may be attributed to its scarcity of large towns and the general dependence on agriculture under a steady mode of farming.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The only river of consequence is the Almond, or Amound, but there are a number of considerable rivulets and burns, and the Forth yields advantages which amply compensate for the deficiency of river navigation. The Almond rises in the high grounds of Lanarkshire, and, pursuing a north-easterly course, falls into the sea at Cramond; at its mouth it assumes the appearance of a small loch or arm of the sea, running up the bottom of a woody ravine; but it is not navigable except for a very short distance, and that only for boats and very small sloops. The main line of RAILWAY that passes through this county is the Edinburgh and Glasgow Section of the North British line. Bathgate and Uphall are communicated with by the Edinburgh and Bathgate branch line, Bo'ness by the Monkland Section, Queensferry by another branch, and Whitburn by the Morningside Section—all from the main line.

DIVISIONS AND REPRESENTATIONS, &c.—This county was probably separated into the sheriffdom in the reign of David I.; it was placed by Robert, however, under the administration of a constable, and so it continued until the time of James IV. No other district appears to have been so divided into petty baronies, baileries, regalties and other independent jurisdictions, nor so domineered over by a number of peers inimical to peace and regardless of justice. The oldest family in the shire is that of Dundas, who can trace an unbroken line of descent and residence on the same spot up to the reign of William the Lion (1165), an antiquity rarely to be found surpassed, not only in Scotland, but in any other country. Linlithgowshire comprises eleven parishes and two parts of parishes, which, with two in Mid-Lothian and four in Stirlingshire, form one presbytery. It contains two royal burghs, namely, Linlithgow and Queensferry; the next largest town is Bathgate. Its seaport is Bo'ness, and there are a number of thriving villages. The lord-lieutenant is the Earl of Rosebery. The burghs of Linlithgow, Hamilton, Lanark, Aldrie, and Falkirk, in conjunction, send one member to the Imperial Parliament, and the shire at large another. The member at present sitting for the shire is Peter M'Lagan, Esq., of Pumpherston. The parliamentary constituency for 1831-32 was 1,304. According to the census returns for 1871 the county contained a population of 40,965 inhabitants, and by those for 1881, 43,198. The number of inhabited houses at the last named period was 8,420; uninhabited, 803; and in course of erection, 73.

BATHGATE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF ARMADALE, TORPHICHEN, BLACKRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BATHGATE is a market town, an independent burgh of barony, and a parish; situated on the middle road betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, 18 miles W. from the former, 24 E. from the latter, and between five and six S. from Linlithgow. It is a station on the Bathgate branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow and Monklands sections of the North British Railway. Another line is completed to Airdrie, Bo'ness, &c., joining the North British line at Manuel. The town occupies a pleasant site, near the southern base of a great ridge of hills, extending across the county, and sheltering the town on the north and east; while it has a fine southern exposure, and is seen at a considerable distance from that direction and from the west. These hills abound with limestone quarries, in which are found fine specimens of fossil remains. Visitors from America, &c. who a few years ago were geologising in the district, procured some rare specimens. Bathgate lays claim to high antiquity. Malcolm IV. granted to the monks of Holyrood the church at Bathkel, with the land belonging to it; at one period the town and its adjoining lands formed part of the ample possessions of King Robert Bruce, which, in 1306, he gave as a dowry to his daughter Marjory, on her marriage with Walter, the Great Stewart, and this marriage introduced the Stuart family to the throne of Scotland. The town, which is lighted with gas by a joint-stock company, consists of a new and an old part; the former is well built, and the streets are paved; it is abundantly supplied with water of an excellent quality by a new water works, costing £6,000. Few places of its size can show so much bustle and tidiness, and the town is considered to be very healthy. Bathgate was made a burgh of barony by Charles II. in 1661, and was created a free and independent burgh of barony by Act of Parliament in 1824, and placed under the control of a provost, three bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer, a town clerk, and a procurator fiscal. It has now adopted Provost Lindsay's Police Act of 1862, and is governed by twelve commissioners. The sheriff holds small debt courts here once a quarter. Young's Paraffin Light Company, Limited, have extensive works a mile and a quarter from the town; an iron foundry, two spade and shovel and a glass works are in the town, and a large distillery near to it. At Westfield, about two and a half miles distant, is the extensive mill of Messrs. James Stewart and Co., paper manufacturers, affording occupation for a large number of hands. The weaving of goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, which at one time employed many hands, is now only carried on to a very limited extent. On the north border of the parish, the silver mine workings were a few years ago re-opened. These were once greatly esteemed, and the precious metal smelted not far from the spot before being coined. James VI. took a great interest in the concern, although history tells us, not much to his profit. Mr. Henry Aitken (of the firm of Messrs. Russell and Son), the renowned coalmaster, obtained a lease of the mines from the Earl of Hopetoun, the proprietor, but after earnest research found them to be unprofitable.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian chapel, an Evangelical Union chapel, and also a Roman Catholic chapel, all of which have a manse or residence for the minister. The burgh boasts of a superior educational institution in the Bathgate Academy, endowed by the late John Newland, of Kingston, Jamaica, a native of this town; the sum bequeathed by this gentleman amounted, previous to the erection of this building, to between £16,000 and £17,000. The Academy stands on a commanding and healthy site in the immediate vicinity of the town, and is an elegant and extensive structure; it comprises seven large class-rooms, library-room, and rector's house. The courses of education are conducted on the most approved systems by a rector and a number of teachers. It is now under Government inspection, and is managed by trustees, one of whom represents the lord of the manor, and another is appointed by the Commissioners.

The youth of the parish have thus the benefit of a first-rate instruction in all the useful and many of the more learned branches, while others, not parishioners, are admitted at the discretion of the trustees. The Parish Board School, which is situated near the Academy, has a handsome appearance, and is numerously attended. There are three bank branches, viz.: the National, the Royal, and the Union Bank, and a Savings Bank. The principal commercial and posting establishments are Stewart's and Simpson's Hotels, where commercial men and others will find ample accommodation, and there are also two restaurants in the town. The market day is Tuesday, when a large supply of grain of all kinds is brought from the surrounding country. The buyers and sellers are accommodated in a splendid building erected in Jarvey street, called the Corn Exchange. The building also contains spacious rooms for courts and for other public meetings. The following eminent men were born in the parish: Dr. John Fleming, professor of natural science, Aberdeen; Dr. John Reid, professor of anatomy, St. Andrews; and the celebrated Sir James Simpson, Bart., whose reputation is European. The authorities of the burgh are entitled to hold (by Act of Parliament), seven annual fairs—namely, on the third Wednesdays in April, July and August, on the first Wednesdays after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas (o.s.), and the fourth Wednesdays in June and October; the Whit-sundae and Martinmas fairs are the principal, and are well attended by cattle dealers. The parish of Bathgate embraces an area of 10,876 acres. The population of the town in 1871 was 4,991, and in 1881, 4,885.

ARMADALE is a village in the parish of and two miles west from Bathgate, on the main road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It is in a flourishing state, being situated amongst large fields of iron stone, gas coal, common coal, &c., and is well supplied with gas by a public company. It is a police burgh, with nine commissioners. The village takes its name from an estate long the property of Sir William Honeyman, a senator of the College of Justice, under the title of Lord Armadale. The places of worship in the village are a Chapel of Ease to Bathgate Established Church, a Free Church, an Episcopal, and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. A railway passing near to the village, offers facilities for mineral traffic; and Armadale is a station on the Western section of the North British Railway. Several thriving hamlets surround the village. The mining villages of DURHAMTOWN, POLKEMMET, and BATHVILLE are also situated in the parish. Population of Armadale in 1871, 2,708.

TORPHICHEN is a parish and village, the latter on the road from Bathgate to Linlithgow, 2½ miles N. by W. from Bathgate, and 4½ S.W. by S. from Linlithgow. It is a place of great antiquity, and was once of importance; but it has now an entirely rural character and presents a straggling, yet pleasant appearance. Adjacent to the village on the north-east are some remains of the hospital or preceptory of Torphichen, the principal Scottish residence of the Knights of St. John, of Jerusalem; of the church of the preceptory, the chancel and the nave are entirely gone, and only the choir and the transept remain. The nave is traditionally reported to have been of great length; but its site is now occupied by an edifice of a very different character, the plain modern Parish church. There is also a Free church in the village said to be one of the first Free churches in Scotland. In the village is an excellent Board school, conducted by efficient teachers. The parish, although in some parts rather moorish, is generally fertile; coal and ironstone are found within it, and there are brick and tile works and a paper mill within its bounds. Acreage, 9,939. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,630.

BLACKRIDGE is a small hamlet in the parish of Torphichen, about five miles and a half from Bathgate to the west, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow road, seated in an agricultural district. A Free church is situated in the village, and a school near to it.

BORROWSTOUNNESS,

AND THE PARISH OF CARRIDEN, WITH THE VILLAGES OF GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS, BLACKNESS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BORROWSTOUNNESS (or as it is now generally pronounced Bo'ness) is an ancient sea-port, burgh of barony and parish bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth, on the south by the parish of Linlithgow, on the east by Carriden, and on the west by the river Avon, which separates it from Stirlingshire. Its length eastward is about four miles, and its average breadth is about two. The town is 18 miles w. from Edinburgh, 9 w. from Queen's Ferry, 3½ n. from Linlithgow, 8 from Falkirk, and 5 E. from Grangemouth. It is situated on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, on a piece of low ground or ness, and consists principally of two streets, running eastward, terminating in one of nearly the same length, the greater portion of the houses forming which appear to be of very old date. Between 1750 and 1780, Bo'ness was one of the most thriving towns on the east coast, and ranked as the third port in Scotland; but when the junction of the Forth and Clyde was effected by means of the great canal, Grangemouth, situated at the east end of the canal, became the chief seat of commerce, and in 1810 was erected into a separate port, with a Custom House. The trade of Bo'ness then greatly declined. It is the seat of a Custom House, whose district extends on both sides of the Forth from Cramond Water and Denbri-ble Point to the boundaries of the ports of Grangemouth and Alloa. The harbour is good and safe, consisting of a basin, 240 feet in breadth, with two piers, 569 feet each in length, and has a depth of from sixteen to twenty feet; a great advantage and inducement to shippers and traders frequenting the harbour is that of moderate port charges. The Monkland section of the North British Railway terminates at the harbour. Bo'ness is one of the chief places on the Forth for the manufacture of salt. Besides these works there are a distillery, earthenware manufactories, a fire brick works, a ropery, five iron foundries, three engineering establishments, and a chemical works. At KINNEIL, about half a mile westward, are extensive iron works, erected about thirty years ago, which afford employment to fifteen hundred persons. At these works are four blast furnaces for smelting the ore, with which, as well as that of coal, the Kinneil estate abounds; from this cause the population of the parish and the shipping has been greatly increased. In 1839, the aggregate tonnage of the port was 6,521; in 1861, the tonnage inward was 14,148; out-ward, 97,565; total, 111,713; in 1865, the registered tonnage was 5,325; the tonnage of shipping inward, with cargo from foreign parts, was 8,093, and outward 12,111, and in 1871, the tonnage inwards was 21,899, and outwards 41,163. Coast- ing trade, inward, 3,462, and outward 12,409; gross tonnage for 1871, 78,938; and for 1875, 92,000. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland, are established in the town. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the burgh, the government being vested in a body of trustees. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian chapel; also two public and several other schools. Kinneil House, one of the family seats of the Duke of Hamilton, is the most remarkable building in the parish. Here the celebrated Watt realized some of his earliest improvements upon the steam engine; and Professor Dugald Stewart was the last tenant. The barony of Kinneil is one of the most ancient posses- sions of the house of Hamilton. The Roman wall of Antonius, commonly called "Graham's Dyke," passes through the parish; and within a short distance of the town to the south-east the traces of the Roman camp are still visible. The village of BORROWSTOUN- ness about a mile inland from Bo'ness. The parish of Bo'ness has an area of 3,145 acres. In 1881 the town contained a population of 6,037

The parish of CARRIDEN is bounded by Bo'ness on the West, Aber- corn on the east, and Linlithgow on the south; it lies on the south bank of the Forth, and is not more two miles in length by one in breadth. The whole district is well enclosed and cultivated. This and the adjoining parish of Bo'ness were amongst the first localities in Scotland in which coal was found. At present mining operations in both coal and iron are carried on very extensively. The other branches of trade form part of what is given as regards Bo'ness. Within the parish of Carriden, besides its own village, are those of GRANGE PANS, MUIRHOUSES, BRIDGENESS and BLACKNESS, the latter, which in former times, previous to the rise of Bo'ness, from local advantages was a harbour of considerable importance, was also celebrated for its castle, which, during the reign of James VI., was the principal state prison in Scotland, and as such received within its gloomy walls many distinguished persons; one of the most remarkable of its prisoners was Lord Ochiltree, who for accusing the Marquis of Hamilton of aspiring to the Scottish crown was here confined during nearly the whole reign of Charles I.—upwards of twenty years—and was not liberated until the country fell under the dominion of Cromwell. Blackness castle is one of the ancient fortresses whose preservation was guaranteed by the Act of Union. The edifice was converted to the purposes of a barrack in the course of a long protracted war. Recently, however, from the continued agitation of the city of Edinburgh, the Government has altered, repaired, and fitted up this castle as a powder magazine or dépôt, with barracks attached for accommodating a company of soldiers in charge of the magazine, stores, and premises. A small pier has also been erected for shipping and landing stores at the castle. The pier of Bridgeness affords good accommodation for small vessels employed in the exportation of salt, coals, ironstone, &c. At Grange Pans are the works of Archibald Ballantine, Esq., ironfounder, and the Forthbank Foundry Company—also a salt works and brick works. At GRANGE, the residence of Henry Cadell, Esq., the pro- prietor, are extensive coal and iron works. Within the parish of Carriden, and a mile east of Grange, is Carriden House. The place of worship is the parish church. There is a public school and one for girls, with a subscription school at Grange Pans. Colonel Gardiner was born at Burnfoot in this parish. Acreage of the parish of Carriden, 2,705; population in 1871, 1,793.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY.

ON THE MONKLAND SECTION OF THE NORTH
 BRITISH LINE.
 Station, North st—Robert Dott, station master

LINLITHGOW,

MUIRAVONSIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINLITHGOW (popularly pronounced Lithgow), is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the shire and parish of its name, and the seat of the presbytery of Linlithgow; 16 miles w. from Edinburgh, 31 E. by N. from Glasgow, 8 E. from Falkirk, and three and a half from Bo'ness; seated on the bank of a fine lake, and on the E. in-burgh and Glasgow section of the North British Railway, for which line a principal station is established here. It is chiefly formed of a single street, which runs east and west along the south edge of the water. Some of the houses in the town still possess the characteristic feature of the Scotch style of architecture, but many of the older specimens have within the last few years been replaced by more modern tenements. The town, however, still possesses a variety of objects that cannot fail to interest the attentive traveller and impress the mind with an idea of its ancient grandeur. Amongst these are the magnificent ruins of its royal palace, the venerable church adjoining, and the terraced promontory on which both edifices were erected. The palace is a quadrangular building, enclosing a spacious open court, and occupies the site of a Roman castle. The castle was razed and re-erected by Edward I. of England; and of this structure there still exist three round towers on the east side of the palace, and which have been used as abutments for supporting the massive east wall of the palace. The palace was a favourite hunting scene of the Stuart dynasty; and was enlarged and enriched by nearly all of these princes. James IV. was particularly attached to his Linlithgow residence, and in the poem of "Marmion" Scott has vividly depicted the bustle and gaiety of the Court there. Mary Stuart, the lovely and unfortunate Queen of Scots, was born in a room on the west side of the palace on December 5th, 1542; but there are few other noteworthy incidents connected with it. In the centre of the palace quadrangle may be seen the shattered remains of a beautiful fountain, exquisitely and elaborately carved by Italian artists, who were brought over by one of the Stuarts. A restoration of this fountain was made by the late Mr. Matheson, of Her Majesty's Board of Works, and it now adorns the west front of Holyrood House. This fountain was supplied with water from the estate of Preston, about a mile distant, and the pipes leading to it were discovered in digging a drain in the Carmelite Friar's lands on the south side of the town. The church is a beautiful example of later Gothic architecture. The nave and transept are richly carved and ornamented, but the choir and apse are of a more recent and inferior style. At the west end there is a massive square tower and belfry, which, till the beginning of the present century, was surmounted by a crown, something in the style of St. Giles', Edinburgh. There is a fine peal of bells in the tower, one of them being dated as re-cast in 1463, and bearing an inscription that it had been named then, as formerly, "Meg Duncan." The Established congregation worship in the choir, which is divided from the nave by an ornamented party wall. In the vestry are to be seen some interesting relics of the church; and in the south end of the transept (called St. Catherine's aisle) the Scotch nobles are said to have attempted, by means of a spectral apparition, to terrify James IV. from persisting in his invasion of England. Among the ancient dwellings a particular house used to be pointed out to strangers as the place from whence Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh shot the regent Murray. A bronze tablet, with the effigy of the regent, has been inserted in the wall of the county-court room to denote the spot where the house stood. On the north side of the railway, a little to the west of the station, is an old house which formed part of a preceptory of the Knights Templars of Torphichen, and was used in the reign of James VI. as the Scottish mint. The ancient Prætorium, or Town House, an elegant structure, erected in 1634, was partially destroyed by fire in 1817, but was immediately repaired; it contains a council chamber and sheriff court-room, and a large hall, tastefully decorated, for public meetings. To the north of this stands the County Hall, which is handsome and convenient, and contains full length portraits of the late General Hope, of Hopetoun, of his brother, Sir Alexander Hope, both distinguished officers, and of the present Earl of Rosebery. Linlithgow is one of the oldest royal burghs in Scotland. The Town Council is fifteen in number, and the magistrates elected from the Council are a provost and three bailies. The burgh unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie and Falkirk in sending one member to Parliament, the present one (1882) being John Ramsay, Esq. of Kildalton.

The county has lately erected a spacious court-house, on the south side of the street, a little to the west of the Cross Well. The building contains offices for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk, procurator fiscal, and chief constable; besides a spacious court-room, small court-room, witnesses and jury rooms, and a hall for the procurators of court. A court is held every Tuesday and Friday for small debt and criminal cases. Immediately opposite to the Town House is a fountain, completed on the 4th of June, 1807, in imitation of the ancient Cross Well; it is of hexagonal form, ascended by steps; the water descends from the top of the fountain, which is surmounted by a unicorn holding a shield; the stream falls into a basin, from whence it is spouted into a larger one through the mouths of six grotesque figures, whence it again issues through the jaws of six other heads into a still more capacious receptacle, which is surrounded by statues in male and female ancient costumes; here all the streams are concentrated, and find egress in a copious gush, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. The work is said to have been all hewn by a one-handed mason. This architectural curiosity is surrounded by iron palisades of light and elegant workmanship. Several other fountains of similar formation are to be seen in the town. The Combination Poor House at St. Magdalene's, on rising ground, about a quarter of a mile from the town, was erected in 1854, and is a neat and commodious building, including several lunatic wards. The cost of the erection was £9,000 defrayed by the following parishes in proportion, according to the number of shares which each has in the establishment. Linlithgow is the largest contributor, and others in the following order - Borrowstounness, Bathgate, Whitburn, Carriden, Kirkliston, Muiravonside, and Abercorn. Paper-making, tanning, currying, and shoemaking may be taken as the staples of the trade. In the tanning and currying branches are several large establishments, the principal of which belongs to Messrs. T. Nimmo & Co. There are also close to the town two paper mills, a distillery, and soap works. The Union canal passes close by the town; an extensive basin of excellent masonry affords commodious accommodation to vessels trading in the canal, and a beautiful aqueduct, unsurpassed in the United Kingdom, conducts its water on twelve arches over the river Avon and a deep and extensive valley. The railway before mentioned passes along the south side of the main street. Near to the bridge, about a mile to the west, the line is carried over the Avon by means of a viaduct of 19 arches of substantial masonry.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian chapels, one for Independents and one for Roman Catholics. There are three Board schools and an endowed school. A weekly market for grain is held on Friday, and there are fairs on the Friday after the second Tuesday in January, February 25th, the third Friday in April, the second Tuesday in June, August 2nd, and the first Friday in November. In 1871 Linlithgow contained a population of 3,690; and in 1881, 3,914.

MUIRAVONSIDE is a parish in the county of Stirling, about two miles from Linlithgow, its post town, and about seven miles from Falkirk. It is situated on the left bank of the Avon, which river is here rendered of great service in propelling the works of a number of mills on its banks. The parish, which is six miles in length by two in breadth, is bounded by the parishes of Bo'ness, Linlithgow, Torphichen, Polmont and Slamannan. The land is nearly all arable and enclosed, and beneath the surface there is an abundance of coal, lime and iron. The latter is manufactured by Messrs. Russell and Son, of Falkirk, near to which, at Causewayend, are the works of the Linlithgow Foundry Company, ironfounders. The parish of Muiravonside covers an area of 7,963 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 2,653.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW SECTION OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

Station, at the east end of the town—David Jackson, station master
 Station, CAUSEWAYEND—William Russell, station master

QUEENSFERRY, WITH DALMENY.

QUEENSFERRY, or, as it is sometimes called, SOUTH QUEENSFERRY (in contradistinction to North Queensferry, a harbour of Fifeshire), is a royal burgh and parish, the latter being confined within the limits of the former; 9 miles west from Edinburgh, the same distance east from Bo'ness, and 4 south-east from Ratho, a station on the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British Railway, situated between the shore of the Frith of Forth and the ridge that rises from the coast. It is an excellent and safe harbour, and can be entered at any time according to the tide. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having received its name from the Queen of Malcolm Canmore (Margaret), who usually made choice of the ferry at this place for the passage of the Frith. Under her auspices the town increased in size, population, and commerce, but in the present day it is not conspicuous for either; it has no foreign trade, and through the winter it is chiefly supported by fishing. Some little consequence belongs to it from being the ferry at Newhalls (a little to the eastward of the town) over the Forth; there is another pier a short distance to the westward, for the convenience of boats when they cannot make the former point; they are both handsome slips or piers, and run a considerable distance into the water. At this place the Frith is contracted to a gut of two miles in width; and in the middle of the strait lies a small rocky island called INCHEGARVIE. About half a mile to the westward is Port Edgar, so named from Prince Edgar having landed there. From this place George IV., when on a visit to Scotland, embarked on his return to England.

As a royal burgh, Queensferry is governed by a provost, two bailies, and a town council. The burgh unites with Stirling, Culross, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline in returning one member to Parliament. The Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery gave a piece of ground for a bleach green to the inhabitants, and also conveyed water into the town for their use; the magistrates and council, to evince their gratitude for these favours, raised a tablet, with an appropriate inscription over the fount. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a chapel for the Presbyterians. A fair is held on the second Friday in August. The population of Queensferry, including Dalmeny, was in 1871, 1,521, and in 1881, 1,676.

DALMENY is a parish and small village, in the north-east of Linlithgowshire; the parish consists of a main body and a detached district, the main body surrounds its post town, Queensferry, and contains some of that town's outskirts on the east and west. Its length from east to west is five miles and a half, and breadth three and a half miles. Nearly the whole of the parish is well cultivated and enclosed, and contains some mansions, amongst which are Lord Rosebery's, Craigie Hall, Dundas Castle, &c. The village, which is about a mile from Queensferry, contains the parish church and parochial school; the former is of great antiquity, built in the mixed Greek and Gothic style of architecture. There are only about a dozen more houses in the village. The small hamlet of CRATIE is in the parish.

ON THE QUEENSFERRY BRANCH OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

Stations, DALMENY, NEWHALLS & QUEENSFERRY

UPHALL, WITH BROXBURN,

ECCELSMACHAN, DECHMONT AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of Uphall is bounded by Kirkliston on the north-east and east, by Mid-Calder on the south, Livingstone on the west, and Linlithgow and Ecclesmachan on the north. It is intersected from west to east by the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and is watered by a rivulet called BROXBURN, on which and the public road stands the straggling village of that name, at the distance of ten miles from Edinburgh and seven from Linlithgow. The western extremity of the village is crossed by the Union Canal from Edinburgh. A church of the Establishment is at Uphall, and one each for a Free congregation, United Presbyterians (recently erected), and Roman Catholics at Broxburn. It also contains a parochial school. In the chancel of Uphall Church are deposited the remains of the Hon. Henry Erskine, as also of the late Lord Chancellor Erskine. Shale, which is now so largely used in the manufacture of paraffin oil, of which there are two extensive works in the locality, is found in abundance in the neighbourhood, and is said to be of a very rich quality; bone manures are also manufactured in the village. Altogether Brox-burn is in a prosperous condition. The parish abounds in coal, sandstone, limestone, and ironstone. The district is chiefly of an upland character, but it is under the best system of agriculture and enclosure, and possesses some large plantations. The parish of Uphall comprises 4,541 acres, and had in 1871, a population of 2,772, and in 1881, 4,812.

The small parish of ECCELSMACHAN lies south of Abercorn and east of Linlithgow, about five miles from the latter town, and a mile and a half from Uphall; it is four miles in length by one in breadth; is watered by a tributary of the Almond; and near the church is a weak sulphurous spring, called the Pulsion Well. There is a church of the Establishment and a parochial school in the parish, which is a flat corn country, altogether under cultivation and based on freestone. Acreage of the parish, 2,647; population in 1871, 329.

DECHMONT is a small village in the parish of Livingstone, and about a mile and a quarter west from Uphall, its post town, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Glasgow.

POST OFFICE, BROXBURN, Thomas Gray, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Edinburgh) at half-past eight morning and twenty minutes before five evening, and are despatched at a quarter to eight morning, five and twenty minutes before four afternoon and eight evening.

WHITBURN,

CROFTHEAD, LONGRIDGE, BLACKBURN, AND LIVINGSTONE.

WHITBURN, or WHITTEBURN, is a parish and village, the latter 21 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 10 s. from Linlithgow, and 4 from Bathgate; situated on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, on which line the company have a station at EAST WHITBURN, about a mile distant. It is a regularly built little place, and is supported by the coal and iron mines with which the parish abounds, and a little weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow houses. It contains a public coffee house and reading room, the gift of Lady Baillie, and a handsome schoolhouse, the latter built by the trustees of the late Mr. Wilson, who bequeathed a considerable part of his property for the laudable purpose of erecting and supporting charity schools in the district. Within the parish are three other villages, called EAST WHITBURN, LONGRIDGE, and CROFTHEAD. The two latter were formerly populous and increasing, but are now greatly deteriorating from their former prosperity, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the neighbouring coal works. The places of worship are the Established church and a Free church. The parish is watered by the Almond, the Breich, and two small rivulets. There is much moss and pasture land in the upper portion; in the lower division, on the contrary, the surface is arable, and admirably planted and enclosed. Acreage of the parish, 9,775; population in 1871, 6,911, of which the village numbered 1,432.

BLACKBURN is a small village in the parish of and about 4 miles west of Livingstone, seated on the bank of the Almond. Adjacent to the village is a lake stone quarry, said to be one of the only two in Scotland. The stone is used in the construction of ovens, being capable of bearing any amount of heat, but is useless for building purposes. There is also a works for the manufacture of millboard. There is a Board school in the village.

CROFTHEAD is a village in the parish of and about four miles south-west of Whitburn. It is surrounded by coal and ironstone mines, which, with the paraffin oil works, afford employment to the greater portion of the inhabitants. The Morningside section of the North British Railway passes close to the village and has a station here. There is a Catholic chapel in the village, and one of Wilson's endowed schools; also two colliery schools near to it; population in 1871, 954.

LIVINGSTONE is a parish and village—the former stretching from five to six miles along the north bank of the Breich water, which separates the county from Edinburghshire, and has a breadth of from three to four miles. The village, which is not large, is six miles from Whitburn and four from Blackburn, situated on the banks of the Almond water, and on one of the roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow. The parish church is situated at the west end of the village, and the other place of worship is a Free church erected in 1858, with a manse. There is also in the village a parochial school. Acreage of the parish, 5,362; population in 1871, 1,727.

NAIRNSHIRE.

THIS is a small maritime county in the north-eastern part of Scotland, once forming a portion of the ancient province of Moray. It is bounded on the north by the Moray Frith, on the east by the shire of Elgin (or Moray), and on the south and west by the county of Inverness. It extends from the coast, on the north, to the small lake of Lochindorb (situate at its extreme southern apex), on the south twenty miles; the breadth along the shore is twelve miles, and its sides vary from twelve to twenty-two miles asunder. The shire comprises two hundred and fifteen square miles; the number of acres in the shire is one hundred and thirty-seven thousand five hundred.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The agricultural properties of Nairnshire assimilate so closely with those of the county of Elgin, that but brief notice of its wealth and capabilities in this respect is here necessary. Exclusive of the hilly part of the district, it may be described as a narrow border of level ground, along the shore, from one to nearly six miles in breadth—and here for the most part it is arable; but as the country recedes farther from the coast, it becomes bleak and hilly; there are, however, no eminences of great altitude or note in the whole county. The farms are usually small, and most frequently unenclosed. Sheep and black cattle are reared in considerable numbers, and chiefly fed on the natural pasturage. The county is crossed, in its southern or hilly part, by the river Findhorn, which runs in a direction from south-west to north-east; parallel with this rapid stream, about eight or nine miles to the west, courses the river Nairn, which also runs into the Moray Frith. Besides the rivers there are several small brooks, the banks of which are covered with woods and plantations; and there are some elegant seats scattered over the country.

RAILWAY.—The only railway which passes through this county is the Highland railway, on which line Nairn is a station.

Small as this shire is, it possesses a distinct political and judicial establishment. It comprises three complete parochial divisions with seven parts of parishes, and contains one royal burgh, NAIRN, which is the only town. This burgh, in conjunction with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres, sends one member to Parliament; and the county unites with Elginshire in returning another representative; the present member for the joint counties being Sir George Macpherson Grant, Bart. The parliamentary constituency in 1881-82 numbered 293. According to the census returns for 1871, Nairnshire contained a population of 4,786 males, and 5,439 females; total, 10,225; in 1881 the figures were: Males, 4,975, females, 5,479; total, 10,454, showing an increase in ten years of 229. The number of houses inhabited in the shire at the last-named period was 2,077; uninhabited, 110; and in course of erection, 15.

NAIRN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ARDCLACH AND AULDEARN, AND THE VILLAGE OF CAWDOR.

NAIRN is a royal burgh of considerable antiquity, having been regaled by William the Lion. It is supposed that the town derives its name from the river Nearn, in Gaelic meaning alders—the river or water being understood. The original charter of the burgh is not extant. It was granted by Alexander I. in the year 1100, and was renewed by King James VI.—the gentle King Jackie—the first of the Stewarts who ascended the English throne. It is stated of this monarch that he boasted of having a town in Scotland, the burgh of Nairn, which was so long that the inhabitants of the one end could not understand the language spoken at the other end. There was truth in this so far, at least, that till lately the border of the Highlands seemed to intersect the town about Rose-street, and the Highlanders naturally clung together and leved to congregate at that end of the town.

It is distant by rail from Edinburgh, 185 miles; from Aberdeen, 93½; from Perth, by the Inverness and Perth Junction Railway, 128½; from Forres, 9½; and from Inverness, 15½ miles. There is a harbour here with breakwater and pier. Approaching the town from the west, is seen the Nairn Hospital, a handsome building erected by subscription in 1846. Near the centre of High-street is a spacious structure erected about 1818, containing a town and county-court room. For a seaport town Nairn enjoys certain advantages, obtained from a fertile country yielding various articles proper for exportation. The exports consist of timber, corn, potatoes, eggs, smoked haddocks, herrings, and freestone. The imports are groceries, hardware, lime, manures, and coal. Four branch banking establishments are settled here, and also a savings bank. The white fishery is carried on successfully, and salmon fishing is also prosecuted. About four miles distant is the celebrated Royal Brackla Distillery, a very extensive establishment. The Highland Railway facilitates intercourse with the surrounding country, and the transit of goods and produce. The freestone quarries in the neighbourhood give employment to a number of men. The burgh unites with Inverness, Forruse, and Forres in returning one member to Parliament. The present member is Charles Fraser Mackintosh, Esq., of Drummond, Inverness. A sheriff's court and a small debt court are held weekly. Nairn has been considerably improved of late years, being much resorted to in summer, its beach is inviting, and in the neighbourhood is some fine scenery and many agreeable residences. Some years ago new baths were erected by a public company, at a cost of about £15,000, the floors of which are formed of the solid rock, with a graduated depth of water. The bathing facilities in Nairn altogether are unrivalled by any town in Scotland, and the special characteristics of the place are those of a fashionable watering resort. A new Public Hall has also been erected at a cost of about £12,000, which will accommodate 800 persons. It is situated in the High-street, and is much used for public entertainments. The places of worship are the Parish, Free and United Presbyterian churches, and a chapel each for English and Scotch Episcopalians, Independents and Roman Catholics. One of the handsomest buildings in the town is the New Free Church, which was opened for public worship on 1st January, 1882. It is situated opposite the Strath Monument, and is exposed on three sides. Its elevations are of a very striking character. It is built in the early French style and the modified Gothic is very effectually carried out both on the exterior and interior. A very handsome spire surmounts the building, a clock and bell being placed in the lower base of the tower. It is seated for 1,200. There is an excellent museum, containing a valuable cabinet of minerals. At the western extremity of the town, adjoining what was formerly the parish school, a neat monument was erected some years since to Mr. John Strath, who was forty years schoolmaster. Fairs, cattle, horse, and general markets are held here once a month, on the Saturday following Muir of Ord market. Corn markets on Thursday weekly. Feeding markets, Thursdays preceding 26th May and 22nd November. The area of the parish is 8,837 statute acres, and its population was, in 1871, 4,869, and in 1881, 5368 of this number 4,161 were returned for the town.

ARDCLACH is a Highland parish, in the south-east of the county. The parish is in general mountainous, covered with heath, and abounding in tracts of bleak and barren moss. It contains no village worthy of the name; till within the last few years it consisted of small crofters, with their plots of land, reclaimed from the surrounding wilds; but of late great improvements in agriculture have taken place, every year increasing the arable acreage of this parish. The river Findhorn traverses the parish, and the scenery along its banks is of the most varied and interesting description. There is a considerable quantity of timber along the banks of the river. The parish church is nine miles from Nairn. A Free church and an Established one are the places of worship. Population in 1871, 1,197, and in 1881, 1,117.

AULDEARN, anciently called Erin, is a parish and village—the latter, a burgh of barony, is situated two and a half miles south-east from Nairn. In the immediate neighbourhood of the village is the scene of a victory gained by the Marquis of Montrose over the forces of the Covenanters. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church at Moyness are the places of worship. The parish comprises an area of 14,035 statute acres, and in 1871 possessed a population numbering 1,379, and in 1881, 1,292.

About five miles from Nairn is the interesting and picturesque village of CAWDOR, in the parish of the same name, where, upon the banks of the burn of its name, is an excellent inn, frequented by tourists and families, who visit this spot to contemplate the charming scenery around, and the towers of the ancient castle—the seat of the Thanes of Cawdor. The Castle is occupied in the shooting season, by the Earl of Cawdor. The stranger is granted access to this interesting structure (on applying at the inn for tickets of admission), where are vaulted chambers, spiral staircases, and tapestried rooms. From the summit of the castle is commanded one of the most extensive and lovely views in the county; and many parties of the gay and the fashionable appreciate by their presence in the summer and autumn the various beauties of the favoured locality. The parish of Cawdor, a portion of which is in the adjoining county of Inverness, contains an area of 29,368 statute acres, and in 1871 its population numbered 1,027, and in 1881, 1,070.

THE ORKNEY & SHETLAND ISLES.

THE ORKNEY ISLES,

KNOWN to the ancients by the name of Orcades, are situated in the Northern sea, separated from Caithness-shire, in Scotland, by the Pentland Frith, and lying between the parallels of 58 deg. 41 min. and 59 deg. 25 min. north latitude, and 28 deg. 30 min. west longitude; from the coast of Scotland they are distant four leagues, and from the Shetland Isles about fifteen. The form of the islands is extremely irregular; and from these circumstances the dimensions of some of them are ascertained with difficulty. They are separated from one another by portions of water denominated "sounds," "friths," or "ferries," some of which are only a mile broad, whilst others are more than five. Though thus closely connected, the whole of them are of considerable extent, for from the south-west to the north-east the distance is not less than seventy miles, and they are upwards of forty in another direction.

NAME, EARLY HISTORY, &c.—The earliest inhabitants appear to have been Celtic, who, at an unknown period before the Christian era, established themselves in Scotland. Diodorus Siculus mentions Cape Orkas as one of the extremities of Britain; and the Orcades are first named in the second century by Pomponius Mela, who states their number at thirty; Pliny augments them to forty, but Ptolemy makes them only thirty. Tacitus asserts that the Orcades were discovered and subdued by Agricola, which seems to be corroborated by recent discoveries in the Orkneys of Roman coins belonging to the first century. The origin of the name is believed to be Celtic, and is probably derived from Orken, a large marine animal—a term that has been applied to both whales and seals. Orkney therefore appears to mean "the land of whales," or of "seals." The Orcades seem to have been esteemed of some importance in the time of Constantine, as they are especially mentioned, with Gaul and Britain, as the patrimony of his youngest son. Little is known of the Orcades from that time until the convulsions in Norway, which ended in the elevation of Harold, "the Fair-Haired," to the undivided sovereignty of that country. About the middle of the ninth century Kenneth Macalpin obtained possession of the islands, and they continued with the Scottish throne until the end of the eleventh century, when they were assigned by King Donald Bain to the King of Norway, to whom they were subject until the middle of the thirteenth century, when they were again transferred by Magnus, King of Norway, to Alexander, King of Scotland. But, although the islands were thus ceded, the Norwegians still asserted their right to them until the year 1468, when James III. of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, with whom they again passed, in lieu of her dowry, to the crown of Scotland; and upon the birth of her son, James IV., they were finally ceded, which cession was confirmed when James IV. of Scotland married Ann, daughter of the King of Denmark. From the middle of the sixteenth to the beginning of the seventeenth century the islands were possessed successively by Earls Robert and Patrick Stewart—Robert being a natural son of James V. and half-brother to Queen Mary. Subsequent to this period the islands passed into the possession of the English Crown, and were bestowed by Charles I., and afterwards by Charles II., on the Morton family; in 1776 Lord Morton sold them to Sir Lawrence Dundas, and they have since remained in the family of his descendants. Having been so long and so repeatedly in the possession of the Norwegians, many names of persons as well as of places are derived from the Scandinavian language. It will be comprehended that the Orcadians bear no resemblance whatever to the Celtic Highlanders in language, dress, appearance, or customs. The inhabitants may be divided into three classes; the first consists of the gentry, or proprietors of land with such as have gained a competent fortune by means of industry; the second is formed of those who are denominated tradesmen and shopkeepers; and the third comprises fishermen, and the others for the most part employed in the cultivation of the soil, and are either farmers with servants or what are termed cottagers. Orkney has given birth to some individuals who have attained to eminence in science, literature, and the arts. Of these we may mention Malcolm Laing, author of a well-known "History of Scotland;" Mrs. Brunton, authoress of "Self-Control;" Samuel Laing, author of a "Tour in Norway;" his son, Samuel Laing, late Finance Minister of India; the late Dr. Baikie, the African traveller; Dr. Rae, the Arctic traveller; Thomas Stewart Traill, an eminent professor of medical jurisprudence in the University of Edinburgh; and Murdoch M'Kenzie, author of a "Survey of the Orkney and Lewis Islands." The grandfather of Washington Irving, the celebrated American writer, was born in the island of Shapinsay, and the eminent engraver of the last century, Sir Robert Strang, was born in Kirkwall.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—Compared with the sterile wilds in some of the sister islands to the north, or even with the lofty hills and bleak marshy plains to the south, these islands gain so much that their appearance is favourable and inviting; to the eye their surface presents a rich and pleasing variety. It is conjectured by some (and there are circumstances which strongly tend to corroborate the conjecture) that these islands were, at some distant period, part of the mainland of Scotland. The hills composing the ridge that skirts the Western Ocean, as well as those that intersect the mainland, and occupy some of the other islands, are seldom single and detached, but for the most part formed into ridges of some extent, with small intervening valleys; and their tops, instead of rising high into a conical form, are generally either flat or rounded. Some few of them are almost entirely covered with verdure; the bottoms of many consist of cornfields, interspersed with patches of rich old grass, affording excellent feeding for cattle; the soil is sandy or clay loam. There are spots on some of them delightfully romantic, where the attention is arrested and the ear pleased by the murmurs of the rills, and the eye feasted on flowers that shed their fragrance around. But what is of much more consequence, Providence, ever bountiful in adding to the comforts of man, has, with no sparing hand, spread peat moss over a considerable portion of these islands. The ancient rude modes of cultivation are now abandoned, and the implements of husbandry have been materially improved, but much of the land under tillage is not regularly fenced, nor divided into separate fields. The spirit of improvement is now, however, generally diffused throughout the islands, and regular enclosures are becoming more frequent. The grain cultivated in Orkney is either oats and beans, or an inferior sort of barley. The herring fishery is considerable; the principal "stations" are Papa-Stronsay, Deersound, Holm, Burray and South Ronaldshay. The markets are Ireland, Scotland, and England, a few only being sent direct abroad from Orkney, except the produce of the early fishery, which is carried on in the neighbourhood of Stromness, and from that place the herrings are despatched direct to Hamburg. The cod and ling fisheries are also prosecuted, by various descriptions of craft, from almost all the islands. Throughout the whole of the islands rain falls in considerable quantity, especially on the western coasts; and it is supposed that the annual amount showered upon these islands averages 36·95. Snows are neither so frequent nor so heavy, but they come with comparative violence, and generally from the north-west and south-east; but though what falls in the course of the year may not be much short of the quantity in other northern latitudes, it continues only a few days at a time on the surface of the earth. A peculiarity of the climate with respect to the season of snow and hail merits some attention. Some part of the month of June, which in Britain is well known to be of a pleasant and genial warmth, is here not only colder than the preceding months, but also as much so as any month in winter; for two weeks, and even sometimes more, about the middle of June, the wind blows from the north, strong and piercing, accompanied with snow and hail showers.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—According to a survey taken by Dr. Murdo Mackenzie, in 1750, the whole of the number of the islands under the denomination of the Orkneys amounted to sixty-seven, of which the following twenty-nine only are inhabited:—Mainland (or Pomona), Grimsay, Hoy, Waas, Raaay, Faray, Cava, Flotay, South Ronaldshay, Swaney, Pentland Skerry, Burray, Lambholm, Copinsay, Shapinsay, Stronsay, Papa-Stronsay, Edey, Fairay, Sanday, North Ronaldshay, Westray, Papa-Westray, Egilsay, Rousay, Weir, Enhallow, Gairsay, and Damsay; the remaining thirty-eight, which in the primitive language of the country, are termed "holms," are much inferior in size, and solely appropriated to pasturage. The Orkneys comprise twenty-six parishes; the only two towns are Kirkwall, which is the capital and a royal burgh, and Stromness a burgh of barony. The isles of Orkney and Shetland form one sheriffdom or stewardry, under a sheriff-depute, whose authority extends over all; but he has a substitute resident in Orkney, and another in Shetland, by whom the duties are principally performed. Combined they form one county, under the title of the County of Orkney and Shetland, which returns one member to the Imperial Parliament. Kirkwall, the capital of the Orkneys, is a representative burgh, joining with Wick, Dornock, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty in sending another member. The county is represented by Samuel Laing, Esq., of Crook; and the burghs by John Pender, Esq. The parliamentary constituency of the county in 1881-82 was 1,379. The Lord-Lieutenant is the Hon. John Charles Dundas, M.P., of Papdale. The aggregate area of the Orkney Isles is 610 square miles, or 390,147 acres. The population in 1871 was 14,355 males and 16,919 females; total, 31,274; the numbers returned in 1881 were: Males, 14,973; females, 17,064; total, 32,037, showing an increase in the ten years of 763. The number of inhabited houses in the shire at the latter date was 6,389; uninhabited, 289; and in course of erection, 20.

KIRKWALL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BIRSAY, DEERNES, EVIE, FIRTH, HARRY, HOLM, ORPHIR, St. ANDREWS AND St. OLA, BURRAY, SOUTH RONALDSHAY, AND THE NORTH ISLES.

KIRKWALL, the capital of the Orkney Islands and of the United parishes of Kirkwall and Saint Ola, is a town of great antiquity, a royal burgh, and the seat of a synod and presbytery; 353 miles from Edinburgh by land, and 211 by water; 58 from Wick, 54 from Thurso, 41 from Huna Ferry (the most northerly part of Great Britain), and 14½ from Stromness; situate about the centre of an island, called, by way of pre-eminence, Mainland, or Pomona, and on the south-east of the bay of Kirkwall. The town bears strong characteristics of antiquity; the principal street is exceedingly narrow, being in some places barely wide enough to afford passage for a cart; the houses are generally arranged with their gables towards the street, which gives the town a singular appearance; many of these houses, both externally and internally, present striking features of old age—the doors and windows are small, the walls of great thickness, and the apartments narrow and gloomy. The modern dwellings, however, form an exception to this style, and many of them vie with the most commodious habitations of any other place of the same extent in Scotland. A rivulet, which is crossed by a stone bridge of one arch, passes through the town. The most conspicuous building in Kirkwall is the Cathedral of St. Magnus; it was founded by Ronald, Earl of Orkney, 1133, in honour of and dedicated to his uncle, St. Magnus, and, though the work of different ages, and brought to completion under various superintendence, must be admitted to be an edifice, not only grand and simple, but also surprisingly regular and uniform, and is a most imposing ornamental object of pride to these northern islands. A short distance from the cathedral is a large and handsome church belonging to the United Presbyterians, and near it is the Free church. There are also places of worship for the Episcopalians, Independents, and Roman Catholics. The ancient church of St. Ola, which is believed to have existed prior to the foundation of that of St. Magnus, and was then the only religious establishment, stood near the shore of the road or bay of Kirkwall. Around its site many of the houses are of such antiquated appearance and construction as to allow of the conjecture that these dwellings, from their situation, originally obtained the appellation of Kirkjovanger, or the “Kirk on the bay,” subsequently corrupted to Kirkwall. Opposite the cathedral, on the west side of the street, were the ruins of a fortress, called the “King’s castle,” which time and the havoc of war had nearly levelled; it was a place of considerable strength in 1581, when, or soon after, it was occupied by the Earl of Orkney, natural son of James V. The remains were cleared away during the latter part of 1865, and a new street formed, called Castle street, leading to Harbour street. To the south of the cathedral are the remains of the ancient palace of the Bishops of Orkney, and almost adjoining to these are the ruins of the Earl’s Palace, built by Earl Patrick Stewart, about the beginning of the seventeenth century.

Kirkwall was created a royal burgh, in the first instance, by James III., and its charter was renewed by James V.; its government is confided to a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and eight councillors; it is a representative burgh, and unites with Tain, Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, and Cromarty, in returning one member to Parliament, the gentleman at present sitting being John Pender, Esq. The Town Hall is divided into apartments for a common prison and a court of justice, with a room for council meetings. The quarter sessions are held on the first Wednesday in January, April, July and October; the sheriff’s court is open every Thursday during the sitting of the supreme court, and oftener when necessary. The sheriff’s and commissary courts are held in Kirkwall, the synod of Orkney holds its meetings, and the sheriff’s small debts court is held here.

The harbour of Kirkwall is safe and commodious; it has two excellent piers, and a beautiful iron pier about 300 feet long, built on screw piles, was erected in 1866, at a cost of £10,490—enabling steamers and other vessels to come to the pier head at all times of the tide; the outer bay affords good anchorage ground; altogether the situation of the place is well adapted for the resort of shipping. The making of kelp occupies many persons, and the trade in timber is of some consequence. There are four branch banking establishments, and three hotels. Kirkwall sustains several educational establishments, including an academy or grammar school, which are now under the control of the Burgh School Board. The Orkney Hospital was founded by John Balfour, Esq., of Trenabie, for the relief of the sick, and as an asylum for a certain number of aged, infirm persons, who are attended gratuitously by the faculty of Kirkwall. The Kirkwall fair was at one time famed for the extent of its business and the number of merchants and others attending from various distant places, and it has been compared to the celebrated Leipzig fair on a smaller scale. It is held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of August, and continues during that week and the one succeeding; but the business is now comparatively trifling. There is also a horse and cattle market held on the first Monday in every month. The population of Kirkwall and St. Ola in 1881 numbered 4,777, of which number 3,923 belong to the Burgh of Kirkwall. Of the North Isles Shapinsay contained 974 inhabitants; Rousay, Egilsay, and Weir, 1,118; Westray, 2,195; Papa Westray, 345; Stronsay, 1,299; Eday and Pharay, 802; Sanday, 2,075; and North Ronaldshay, 547. Of the parishes, Deerness numbered 860; St. Andrews, 628; Holm, 1,082; St. Ola, 354; Orphir, 1,012; Firth, 736; Harry, 745; Birsay, 1,581; and Evie and Rendall, 1,351; of the South Isles, Buray contained 693, and South Ronaldshay, 2,608.

STROMNESS,

WITH THE PARISHES OF STENNESS AND SANDWICK, AND THE ISLANDS OF HOY, GRÆMSAY AND FLOTTA.

STROMNESS is a burgh of barony and seaport, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Kirkwall, situated, as that town is, on the mainland (or Pomona Island) of the Orkneys, adjoining the sound of Hoy, opposite Græmsay Island. This place, which has risen within the last century from being a fishing hamlet, composed of a few shattered huts, to a populous town, owes its increase to its admirable harbour and convenient position, by which it is rendered a place of safe resort, in these stormy seas, to vessels trading with the north of the eastern or western hemispheres. Its harbour is a fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, and is sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge of moorish ground, the southern extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy Sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the island of Græmsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land which stretches from the westward. On the east side it is defended by two small islands or holms which extend along the back of it; and even beyond these, in a sort outer harbour or roadstead, there is excellent anchorage for shipping. It was formerly no uncommon thing in the spring months to see in these havens upwards of fifty large vessels on their way to the whale fishery in Davis Straits and Greenland; they called here for the purpose of completing their complement of men, which was generally about twenty for each ship. In some years there were upwards of seven hundred men furnished from this port to Davis Straits, besides one hundred and fifty apprentices; these are now reduced to about one hundred and fifty men and boys. Lobster fishing is carried on extensively and profitably. About five hundred men are engaged in the herring fishery, and employed by the Hudson's Bay Company, who have a resident agent. In this harbour captains may be supplied with necessities to prosecute their voyage; and for repairs of vessels most efficient and expeditious means are afforded by a patent slip. The machinery of the slip is of the most substantial description, and by it a ship of seven hundred tons can be taken into the yard. A very extensive warehouse is situated at the north end of the town; and there is an excellent pier, with eighteen feet of water at spring tides. Boat and ship building is carried on. Branches respectively of the National, the Commercial, and the Union Bank of Scotland are established here, and there are two principal inns. The Orkney Natural History Society's Museum contains Hugh Miller's celebrated Asterolepis, and many other specimens of much interest, and has been enriched by assortments from the collection of the late Dr. Baikie.

Stromness is a very irregularly built town, the habitations having been erected without any regard to uniformity of arrangement, and generally as near the sea as possible; some are even within flood mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays, and jetties, which each individual appears to have constructed as suited his own convenience and taste. Stromness is an independent burgh of barony by a charter held from the Crown, granted in 1817, when the Government was vested in two bailies and nine councillors. The market days are first Wednesday of each month. An annual fair, held on the second Tuesday in September, continues for a week. The streets have recently been paved, and there are gas works in the town. The population of Stromness in 1881 was 2,408. The parish of Stenness contained 625 inhabitants, Sandwick 1,198, Hoy and Græmsay 603, and Walls and Flotta, 1,501.

Post Office, STROMNESS, Elizabeth Sinclair, Post Mistress. Letters from the South arrive daily at half-past two afternoon and are despatched at six morning.

Letters from Finstown, Stenness, Kirkwall, Sandwick and Quoyloo arrive and are despatched once daily.

Letters from Longhope and Flotta arrive and are despatched three times a week.

Letters from Hoy arrive and are despatched twice a week.

THE SHETLAND ISLES,

OR ZETLAND ISLES, above one hundred in number, twenty-three of which only are inhabited, are a group of islands, islets, and rocks, situated in the Northern Ocean, about fifteen leagues north-east of the Orkneys, and forty-four west of Bergen in Norway; lying between 50 degs. 48 mins. 30 secs., and 60 degs. 52 mins. north latitude, and between 1 deg. 52 secs. and 1 deg. 57 mins. west longitude from London. There are three principal islands in the group, namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still farther north-east) Unst; on the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands, the lochs of which are famous for trout, and several of the other islands abound with seal, otter, and wild fowl. The next island in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalsay, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickle Roe, Papa Stour, House, Barray, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms, and skerries. The history of Shetland is so much involved in that of Orkney as to render an enlarged notice of its early history unnecessary. That the Romans visited the coasts of Shetland is highly probable, from the coins of that people which have been discovered—those of Galba, Vespasian, Trajan, and Ælius Cæsar; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt but these islands were first inhabited by the Norwegians, the laws having been administered by “Udallers,” who acted as a sort of petty princes. In the year 875, Harold Harfager, or the “Fair-haired,” subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, who was the first Earl of Orkney, from whom sprang the true Scandinavian dynasties of the Earls of Orkney and Shetland—the latter country being at first too insignificant to be included in the title, although it was included in the grant. On the cession of the Zetland Isles to the Scottish crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the oppressive endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seigniorage in place of the ancient udal tenures. From 1468, when a marriage was concerted between the Scottish monarch, James III., and the Princess of Denmark (when Orkney and Shetland were pledged to the royal husband), to the time when the two countries passed to the English crown, in the persons of Charles I. and II., and afterwards to the Earl of Morton (who sold the estate to Sir Lawrence Dundas), nothing occurs relating to the possession of Shetland distinct from that which has been already noticed in Orkney.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The general aspect of the country is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character; and the summer tourist who may be content to leave behind for a while the rich luxuriance of an English landscape and take a peep at Nature in her more wild and romantic guise, will find, in the diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur of the coast of Shetland, ample gratification. The want of roads has been much felt by the inhabitants of Shetland, but Government are obviating this inconvenience by constructing roads between the principal inhabited parts; and where this means of communication does not exist, boats are called into use on the numerous fine “voes” which penetrate far into the interior. In travelling by land, the small ponies, or “shelties” as they are called, pursue their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of Shetland are of a very diminutive breed. A cow is said to weigh from two to three hundred weight upon an average; an ox from three to four, but seldom exceeding five hundred weight. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, and small swine are very numerous. The sheep are very small, but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knitted into stockings, gloves, and mits. The fleece, which is remarkably soft, has been wrought into stockings of a fine texture. The precarious and scanty corn harvest of Shetland is rarely finished until the end of October or even of November. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. The highest land in these islands is Roeness Hill, which attains an elevation of one thousand four hundred and forty-seven feet. The Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about one thousand three hundred feet above the level of the sea. The chief support of the Zetlander is dependent on the white fishery—herring, cod, and ling abounding on these coasts; besides which, many men and boys are employed every season in the Davis Straits whale fishery. Persons are also engaged in angling for the small fry of the coal fish, or gadus carbonarius—known in Shetland by the name of “sethe.” These swarm in myriads within the numerous creeks and sounds of this northern archipelago. They first appear in May, scarcely more than an inch long. About August they become more abundant, measuring about eight inches in length, and in the early part of the following year they attain the ordinary size of the cod fish. A profitable fishery then takes place in deep tide-ways, supplying the inhabitants with a portion of food and oil from the livers for light and other purposes.

The Shetland Isles form twelve parochial divisions, composing two presbyteries and a synod. The only town in this portion of the northern group is Lerwick; besides it, there are only a few villages and hamlets on the shores. The islands now pay their proportion of the land tax, and in every other respect have become subject to British laws. They are represented in Parliament (as already noticed) in connection with the Orkneys, to which sheriffdom they belong. The acreage is estimated at 268,579, or 325 square miles. According to the census returns for 1871 the population numbered 13,103 males, and 18,505 females; total, 31,608; the figures returned in 1881 were: Males, 12,856; females, 17,053; total, 29,709; showing a decrease of 1,899. At the latter period there were 5,444 houses inhabited, 278 uninhabited, and 20 in course of erection.

LERWICK, SCALLOWAY, &c.,

AND THE NORTH ISLES.

LERWICK, the principal town in Shetland, is (by steam) 272 miles from Edinburgh, 165 from Peterhead (Aberdeenshire), 126 from Wick, and 95 from Kirkwall, situate on the east coast of Mainland, or the largest island of the group. It bears the name of the bay upon whose margin it is built; and that, in its turn, derives its name from a long, narrow inlet on the opposite shore of the island of Bressay, called Lera-voe, and remarkable for its extensive deposit of clay and mud; a projecting point at the entrance to Lera-voe is called Lera-ness; and the whole bay, including the roadstead of Bressay sound, is named Lerwick, which signifies the "bay of clay," or "mud"—compounded of Icelandic leir, Danish leir (clay mud), and Suio-Gothic wik, Danish vig, viig (an arm of the sea, an anchorage). The site of the town, comprising a lunated segment of the sea shore of nearly half a mile in length, and becoming gradually more elevated as it reces from the coast line, presents the appearance of a perfect amphitheatre, and, when viewed from the opposite anchorage, the effect is singularly picturesque. The principal street extends through the whole length of the town, following the curvature of the sea shore, and numerous lanes and closes, constructed at right angles with it, lead to a spacious road on the eminence above the town. The houses are built of a species of grey sandstone, which abounds in the immediate vicinity, and which is both of considerable beauty and great durability, and in general they are far superior to those of the sister town of Kirkwall, in Orkney; but here, as in Kirkwall, the houses (with the exception of those very recently erected) seem to have dropped by accident into their respective localities, their owners apparently being indifferent whether fronts or backs, gables or corners, were planted towards the street; in several places, also, the buildings project so far into the main street that there is scarcely room for a carriage to pass. The more offensive of these obstructions are, however, being gradually removed. The principal public buildings are the Town and County buildings, Fort Charlotte, the parish and other churches, and Subscription Rooms. Fort Charlotte stands on a rocky eminence at the northern extremity of the town; its guns command the whole range of the anchorage, from the south to the north entrance of the harbour. It was originally built in the reign of Charles II., but having been dismantled and allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, it was rebuilt in 1781, and received the name it now bears in honour of the consort of George III. It is at present used as a training establishment for the Royal Naval Reserve. The parish church stands above the town, towards its southern extremity; it is a substantial building, with a Doric front of hewn stone; but in consequence of the flatness of its roof, and the want of a spire, its external appearance is somewhat ponderous; internally, however, it is tastefully and commodiously fitted up. The Free church is a handsome modern building, neatly fitted up. There are several other places of worship, substantial and commodious structures, of which a list, with their ministers, is appended. Lerwick is a burgh of barony, having its municipal government vested in three bailies and twelve councillors, with a separate board of police, all of whom are elected by the burgesses. A sheriff small debt court is held every Thursday, and a baillie court is held as occasion requires. The justices of the peace, the commissioners of supply, and the provincial synod of Shetland also hold their meetings in Lerwick. The trade of this town is much more extensive than the amount of population would indicate. There are shops in almost all the houses on both sides of the principal street; and the mercantile business which is transacted in some of the establishments here would be considered important in many a city in the kingdom. Almost the whole produce of Shetland, consisting of salted fish, beef, oil, butter and hosiery, passes to market through the merchants of Lerwick; and, in like manner, by them are imported nearly all the groceries, spirits, and manufactured goods used throughout the islands. The harbour of Lerwick (or Bressay sound, as it is frequently called) is one of the most spacious, secure and commodious havens in the British Empire. It is bounded on the east by the island of Bressay, and on the west by Mainland, having an entrance from the south and another from the north. Its extent may be inferred from the fact that, on more than one occasion, a fleet of upwards of ninety sail of war ships has anchored in it. Branches of the Commercial and Union Banks of Scotland are established here. The population of Lerwick in 1881 was 4,581, and of the various parishes as follows:—Bressay, Burray and Quarff, 1,768; Delting, 1,654; Dunrossness, Sandwick, Cunningsburgh, and Fair Isle, 4,126; Fetlar, 421; Foula, 267; Nesting and Lunnasting, 1,599; Northmavine, 2,279; Papa Stour, 253; Sandsting and Aithsting, 2,694; Tingwall, Whiteness and Weisdale, 2,348; Walls and Sandness, 1,727; Whalsey and Out Skerries, 1,027; Unst, 2,181; Yell, 2,529.

SCALLOWAY is a seaport village in the parish of Tingwall, eight miles from Lerwick, situated on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland, but in proportion as Lerwick has increased in importance Scalloway has retrograded. Near the village are the ruins of Scalloway Castle, erected in 1600 by Patrick Stewart, Earl of Orkney and Shetland. The inhabitants chiefly subsist by the herring fishery, and for facilitating the pursuit of this branch there is a large quay and extensive warehouse, cooperage, &c. In the spring of the year "hoaf" fishing for cod and ling is also successfully resorted to. The men of Scalloway are of a very fearless character, and frequently put to sea in such boisterous and stormy weather as would deter the most experienced and intrepid seamen of other quarters. They are also a very industrious and persevering race; some have fenced ground, and have erected houses for themselves. The parish church stands three miles from the village, at the head of a fine fresh water loch; and there is a neat chapel of ease in the village, erected by the late Rev. John Turnbull. On the west shore is a spring of very excellent water, the flow from which is uninfluenced by the seasons, being constant and abundant; it is covered by the sea at high water. Not far distant is "Gallows Hill," so called from its having formerly been the place of execution. The last who suffered on the spot are said to have been two unfortunate females, who fell a sacrifice to superstition in the seventeenth century for the alleged crime of witchcraft. The parish of Tingwall numbers 2,348 inhabitants.

PEEBLES-SHIRE,

OR TWEEDDALE, a county in the southern part of Scotland, is bounded on the north and north-east by Edinburghshire, on the east and south-east by Selkirkshire, on the south by Dumfries-shire, and by the county of Lanark for almost the whole extent of its western border. In length, from its southern border to its extreme northern apex, it measures full thirty miles; from east to west, including the parts on the latter boundary that mingle with Selkirkshire, its breadth is upwards of twenty miles, whilst in other parts it varies from ten to fifteen miles. Its form is exceedingly irregular, and it comprehends an area of 356 square miles, or 227,869 acres.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire derives its present title from the county town, and Tweeddale from being the district in which the Tweed has its source, and the vale through which it pursues its course to the east. The Gadenii tribe of Britons, who inhabited this secluded territory on the Tweed, have left innumerable traces of their residence, demonstrated in the names of places, druidic and warlike remains, and sepulchral tumuli. The Romans were the first people who broke in upon the British aborigines in the district; after the abdication of the Roman power, the Gadenii naturally associated with the kindred Britons of Strathclyde; and the descendants of those early settlers continued here throughout the Pictish period, and until the fortunes of the Scottish kings prevailed in 974. From the epoch of the migration of the Strathclyde Britons, in the ninth century, the Scots-Irish intermingled with the remaining Britons on the upper Tweed. The next and last class of intruders on the district were the Anglo-Saxons, from Lothian, who ultimately prevailed, and finally established a settlement in the shire. One of the chiefs of this people, called Eadulph, settled in the vale of Edleston water, to which, with the village, he communicated his name; in this manner those of Saxon lineage founded the families of rank in Peeblesshire. At different times the county suffered in a small degree from the inroads of marauders from the English side of the borders, a circumstance which had the effect of keeping the people long in the exercise and possession of warlike weapons. At Philiphaugh, some of the heads of the best families fell, or were taken prisoners, fighting on the side of royalty; but in the insurrection of 1679, in the West of Scotland, which was ended by the battle of Bothwell Bridge, there were not a dozen persons natives of Tweeddale. Since these stirring events neither the county nor its inhabitants have been in any way prominent in the scenes of history.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The country is an uninterrupted series of hill and mountain ranges, so close upon each other, that there is scarcely to be found a plain of moderate dimensions in the district, and not one of any kind unless upon the margin of the Tweed or its tributaries. Notwithstanding the attempts made by several individuals to encourage new and better modes of agriculture, till within the last seventy years the management of arable farms was in a deplorably low condition; but within the last fifty years particularly, draining, ploughing, and planting have been carried on most effectually, and the general features of the country highly improved. The sides and summits of the hills are at the present time here and there clothed with exuberant plantations; and the great vale of the district, and its minor valleys, are now well cultivated, enclosed and divided; rich arable fields have taken the place of unproductive swamps, and are rapidly advancing up the sides of the hills. The elevations for so small a county are very numerous, and some of them of considerable altitude; the following are the most conspicuous in height above the level of the sea:—Hartfield, 2,916 feet; Broad Law, 2,850; Dollar Law, 2,840; Scrape, 2,580; Gums Cleugh, 2,200; Dundroich, Pykestane, and Hell's Cleugh, each 2,100; Cardon, 2,000; Cairn Hill, 1,800; Broughton Heights, 1,483; and Meigle, 1,480. It appears that about fifty years ago the amount of stock in the shire was 1,126 horses, 5,060 cattle, and 112,800 sheep; since that period the numbers have greatly increased. Little can be said of the minerals of the county. At the north-east extremity of the shire coal is found, but at too great a distance to be of advantage to the general population; the county is in the same predicament as to freestone, and the houses are nearly all built of blue whinstone. At Stobo there is a valuable quarry of blue slate; limestone and marl are plentiful, and ironstone is found in some parts of the district. Peebles-shire is almost devoid of manufactures, except at Peebles and Innerleithen, where there are several mills for the manufacture of tweeds and shawls. It is remarkable that there is so little manufacturing industry displayed, when it is considered what a superiority the district possesses in the purity and fall of its waters, which make it altogether a most advantageous site for the establishment of paper and spinning mills, as well as general manufactures.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Tweed, distinguished as the fourth of Scottish streams; the upper sources of this beautiful water are found in the parish of Tweedsmuir, in this county; it is enriched by many tributaries; and after passing the ancient town of Berwick, falls into the German Ocean. The other rivers are the Lyne, the Leithen, and the Manow, all of which are subsidiary to the Tweed, and the Leggett, which runs into St. Mary's Loch, in Selkirkshire. In the rivers and small lakes there are abundance of salmon and trout, and a lake, called the "West Water Loch," is noted for the quantity of eels with which it swarms. The railway from Peebles to Edinburgh is the North British; the one from Symington to Peebles, the Caledonian. There is also a railway to Innerleithen, and a line from thence to Galashiels. There is also a railway to Linton (properly called West Linton), to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—When the country began to be divided into sheriffdoms, about the twelfth century, Tweeddale was put under the jurisdiction of two sheriffs, of whom one was settled at Traquair, the other at Peebles. Peebles-shire, from its connection with the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde, became naturally a part of the diocese of Glasgow, in which it continued till the dissolution of Episcopacy. The shire now comprises fourteen parishes, and two parts of parishes; it contains one royal burgh—Peebles, but possesses no representative burgh; the county at large, however, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, the present member being Charles Tennant, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1831-32 was 937. The lord-lieutenant of the county is Colin J. Mackenzie, Esq., of Portmore. The population in 1871 numbered 12,330, comprising 5,955 males and 6,375 females; in 1881 it contained 6,619 males, and 7,200 females; total, 13,819; increase, 1,489. The number of inhabited houses in the shire at the last-named period was 2,698; uninhabited, 249; building, 45.

INNERLEITHEN, WALKERBURN AND TRAQUAIR.

INNERLEITHEN or (Inverleithen) is a parish and village—the latter, respectable and pleasant, is 23 miles s. from Edinburgh, 16 N.W. from Selkirk, 12 W. from Galashiels, and 6 E. from Peebles, situated near the mouth of the Leithen, within a quarter of a mile of the left bank of the Tweed, and environed on the east and west by high and partly wooded hills. Upon the banks of the Leithen are several large woollen manufactories, the powerful machinery of which is propelled by the stream, and the works employ a considerable number of hands. Tweeds, shawls and tartans are here made in great perfection. The celebrity and some of the prosperity of the village are derived from the number of visitors who resort hither to a salubrious mineral spring, possessing properties similar in effect to the waters of Harrogate, and found eminently beneficial in cases of scrofulous disorders, inflammation of the eyes, and various diseases originating in impurity of the blood. The spring is much frequented in the summer, particularly by families from Edinburgh, for whose accommodation there are a number of substantial houses, forming a neat small street along the public road, with a variety of houses behind, let as private furnished lodgings. A well-house was erected in 1826, containing subscription reading rooms, which are supplied with newspapers and a select library; there is a branch of the Bank of Scotland, Limited, and a savings bank. The village is well lighted with gas. Additional celebrity has been imparted to this place by Sir Walter Scott, in the publication of his novel called "St. Ronan's Well," of which this spot is supposed to be the scene. An excellent inn here has adopted the title of the novel. About three miles west, situated on a knoll, may be seen the ruins of Horsburgh Castle, one of the range of border peel-towers, anciently possessed of much grandeur and strength. It is spoken of by Armstrong as being habitable in 1775. Between Innerleithen and Walkerburn are Purves Hill Terraces. They are planted with ash trees, but their contour may easily be made out; they vary from about 50 feet to about 120 feet in breadth, and the second in the ascent is over 900 feet in length; the depth between each terrace is about 14 feet. On the range of these terraces was situated Purves Hill Tower, but a few stones only remain to attest its site. Some fifty years ago, an association was instituted, styled the "St. Ronan's Border Club." It was composed of a great number of gentlemen connected with all parts of the country, under whose auspices was held an annual festival for the exhibition of olympic and border games and gymnastic exercises. Though the club is now extinct, the exhibition still takes place, the day of competition being usually in August. The places of worship are Established and Free churches—one for each, a Presbyterian chapel, and one for Independents. There are schools in connection with the churches. This parish, which embraces an area of 23,981 acres contained in 1871 a population of 2,812; and in 1881, 3,636.

WALKERBURN, a mile and a half distant, is a small village in the above parish. It contains two large woollen mills, a subscription school, and a sub-post office. Population in 1871, 802.

TRAQUAIR is a parish on the south bank of the Tweed, and watered also by the river Quair; it lies opposite to Innerleithen, with which place a communication has been opened by means of a fine modern bridge thrown across the Tweed. The general appearance of the parish is mountainous; in it are Gumsleugh and Minchmoor, lofty eminences lying on the road to Selkirk. The old mansion-house of Traquair is delightfully situated on the banks of the Tweed, where that river and the Quair unite; and on the side of the hill overlooking the lawn is the "Bush about Traquair" (the subject of the celebrated ballad), pointed out by a few birch trees, the remains of a thicket or arbour, once the seat of pastoral love. Traquair House originally had a tower situated at the north-east corner, believed to have been erected before the year 900. Large additions were made to the tower by the first Earl of Traquair. There is an Established church and a chapel for Roman Catholics. Traquair parish, which embraces an area of 15,327 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 669.

LINTON,

NEWLANDS, NOBLEHOUSE, ROMANNO BRIDGE, CARLOFS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINTON, or WEST LINTON, as it is sometimes called to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire, is a parish and village; the latter, which is irregularly built, is 16 miles S.W.
 from Edinburgh, 14 N.W. from Peebles, and 11 N.N.E. from Biggar, situated on the banks of the Lyne water. Besides this stream the parish is watered by the North Esk; and although the greater part of the district is hilly yet it is fertile, and famed for its excellent sheep pasturage. A church of the Establishment, one for the congregation of United Presbyterians, and one for the Episcopalian are the places of worship. Linton confers the title of baron upon the family of Traquair. A branch of the Bank of Scotland and a savings bank are established in the village, and there are several good schools. The parish comprises an area of 23,256 statute acres, and its population in 1871 was 1,387, of this number 514 were returned for the village.
 NEWLANDS is a parish lying between Linton and Eddlestone, watered by the Lyne and a small tributary stream called the Tarth. The surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the hills are mostly green without heath. Trees thrive in every part of the parish and the greater part is enclosed by hedgerows and fences.
 The parish church, a small but neat edifice, is situated on the left bank of the Lyne water; and at the confluence of the stream with the Tarth stand the ruins of Drochil Castle, once a large structure, partly erected by the Regent Morton, and left unfinished when he was put to death on the scaffold. Acreage of the parish 12,518; population in 1871, 851.

 NOBLEHOUSE, in Newlands parish, was formerly known by an inn in which the trustees of the turnpike roads used to assemble.
 These meetings are now transferred to the County Hall, Peebles.
 The seat ROMANNO, in the parish, was at the end of the seventeenth century the property and residence of Dr. Alexander Pennycook, the author of some clever poems and a poetical
 "Description of Tweeddale" a district of which he was a native.
 CARLOFS, in Linton parish, is a small village, situate on the northern verge of the county, about three miles from Linton. It originated in the year 1784, and takes its name from some localities in the neighbourhood called "Carling loup," in allusion to a witch or carling who, it is said, "kept the country side in fear," in those parts, and whose traditionary character, it is asserted, furnished to Ramsay the idea of "Manse" in his pastoral of the "Gentle Shepherd."

PEEBLES,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDDLESTON, BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM, AND KILBUCHO, DRUMMELZIER, KIRKURD, LYNE AND MEGGET, MANOR, SKIRLING, STOBO, TWEEDSMUIR, AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

PEEBLES is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of its county and parish, and the seat of a presbytery; 22 miles S. from Edinburgh, the same distance W. by N. from Selkirk, 54 N.N.E. from Dumfries, and 47 E. by S. from Glasgow. It is situate in the centre of the parish, on a beautiful and large plain, having the Tweed running along its southern side, and the Peebles (or Eddleston) waters along its northern limit, surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, and its vicinage is adorned by numerous thriving plantations and elegant mansions. Among the latter, King's Meadow, Kerfield, Venlaw, and Rosetta are the most conspicuous as modern seats. Sir Adam Hay, Bart., of Haystone and King's Meadows, who is the principal proprietor of the parish, has thrown over the Tweed, in a romantic glen, about a mile below the town, an elegant wire bridge, which is much admired. The name of the town has been spelt several ways at different periods—Peblys, Peblys, and Peeblis—and the present orthography is of no older date than the last century. For a long period Peebles has consisted of two towns, respectively called New and Old; the former occupies the ridge of a peninsula projected westward, along the northern side of which flows the Eddleston before mentioned, over which is a bridge forming a communication with the Old Town, which lies on the face of sloping ground. The Eddleston water, by a bend round the head of the peninsula, falls into the Tweed, over which there is another bridge of five arches, which has been widened and greatly improved. The town is neat and clean, and the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas by a joint-stock company. Since the opening of the railway between here and Edinburgh, and the Caledonian Company's Branch from Symington, a vast number of visitors from thence and more distant places have made this place their residence in summer, which has materially assisted to promote its prosperity; some very tasteful villas have been erected for private residences, as well as to accommodate the numerous visitors. Of the public buildings, independent of those for divine worship, the most conspicuous, either in respect to magnitude or architectural prominence, are the County and Town Halls, in which assemblies and other meetings are held, and the Public Schools. As a town profiting by manufactures or external trade, Peebles takes a station inferior to many towns of less magnitude, and not so happily favoured by situation. Formerly the manufacture of woollen and serges was carried on to some extent, and at the beginning of the present century that of fine cotton cloths was introduced; but these branches have gone to decay. There are mills for grinding flour and meal, propelled by water from the Tweed; also woollen mills, and several good inns, the principal being the Tontine. The Bank of Scotland Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, and the British Linen Company's Bank have each a branch here; and there is also a Savings Bank. A newspaper is published here weekly, the Peeblesshire Advertiser and County Newspaper, which has a good circulation.

The Chambers Institution is a fine building in High street, containing a library of 13,000 volumes, a reading room, museum, or gallery of art, comprising many rare specimens from the museums of the Vatican, the Louvre, the British Museum, the Royal Institution Academy, Edinburgh, the students of Mr. D. Bruciana, London, and Mr. J. Anan, Edinburgh, and other collections. Within the edifice is also a large hall for lectures and exhibitions, and a county museum. This valuable property was presented to the burgh by Mr. William Chambers, of the eminent firm of W. & R. Chambers, whose names have been so long and honourably associated with the cheap literature of the country. A native of Peebles, Mr. Chambers always evinced a lively interest in the well-being of the burgh, and as a lasting and substantial proof of his desire for its material and intellectual advancement, purchased the building known as Queensbury Lodge, and at considerable expense had it remodelled so as to form the above useful and ornamental pile. In the quadrangle of the institution stands the old cross of Peebles, which was restored to the burgh by Sir Adam Hay, Bart., after a sojourn of half a century at King's Meadows.

It is not satisfactorily ascertained at what period Peebles was erected a royal burgh; Alexander III. was a munificent patron of it, and its original charter is supposed to have been bestowed by that monarch; succeeding kings recognised its right to the distinction, amongst whom was James VI., whose charter granted to the burgesses an extensive range of landed property and right of common in different parts, nearly the whole of which has been lost to the inhabitants. The government is invested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, seven councillors, and town clerk. A sheriff court is held on Tuesday and Thursday, and a sheriff small debt court every Friday; general meetings of the commissioners of supply, road trustees and freeholders of the shire take place here in the months of April and September, and the meetings of lieutenancy as occasion requires. A pothouse has been erected on the Rosetta road, the situation is well chosen. The Royal Company of Archers, or King's Body-guard for Scotland, come to Peebles from Edinburgh occasionally, attired in the ancient and elegant dress of the bowmen of Scotia, to shoot for the old established prize of a silver arrow, given by the burgh to the most successful marksman.

The places of worship are for those of the Established church, the Free church, Episcopalians, United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics; the last named, on the Rosetta road, was erected in 1858, by the exertions of the Rev. J. Clapperton, aided by numerous friends. The Free church is a neat Gothic building, and the Episcopal chapel is finished in a superior style, and embellished with a beautiful window of stained glass. There are several friendly societies, and several excellent schools, both public and private; for the latter this town has been long and deservedly celebrated, with respect both to the method of instruction and the salubrity of their situation. The ruins of the two ancient churches are still extant, one of which was dedicated to St. Mary, the other built by Alexander III. in the middle of the thirteenth century, and dedicated to the Holy Cross and St. Nicholas; the same monarch erected, likewise, a house contiguous for himself, which continued a royal residence until the accession of James VI. to the throne of England. Among the objects in the town and neighbourhood which generally attract attention is Nidpath Castle, a noble ruin, looking down upon the town and the Tweed from a romantic glen, about a mile distant to the west. The building is a massive tower, and, with its interesting site and localities, is the delight of the draughtsman. This locality is much resorted to in summer for its excellent trout and salmon fishing. Half a mile to the east of the town, on a hill called Janet's Brae, may be discerned the traces of two ancient British camps. The market is held on Tuesday, and the fairs on the second Tuesday in January; the first Tuesday in March (for hiring servants); the second Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday after the 18th of July (for wool) the Tuesday next before the 24th of August, the Tuesday before the 12th of September, the second Tuesday in October, and the Tuesday before the 12th of December. The parish of Peebles has an area of 16,597 statute acres, and by the returns for 1871 had a population numbering 3,172, of which the town contained 2,631.

EDDLESTON (or Eddlestone) is a parish and village—the latter four miles north from Peebles, situated on both sides of the Eddleston water, which takes its rise from various springs on the north and north-east boundaries, and at Covey's Linn forms a cascade of thirty-five feet high. The South Esk has also its source out of a small lake within two miles of the village. Anciently the kirk and its small hamlet stood among the hills to the east, where some vestiges of them still survive the depreciation of time. The church of the present village is a modern building with a school attached. Acreage, 18,490; population in 1871, 700.

BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM, and KILBUCHO are incorporated and contiguous parishes, agricultural and pastoral. The village of Broughton stands on the road from Edinburgh to Dumfries, and from Peebles to Biggar, and is remarkable for its neatness. A branch of the Caledonian Railway from Symington to Preston passes through the parish. There is a church of the Establishment belonging to the united parishes; acreage, 18,065; population in 1871, 720.

DRUMMELZIER (pronounced Drumeltyer) is a parish in the south-western part of the county, lying on the east bank of the Tweed, where also stands Drummelzier Castle, formerly a seat of the once powerful family of Tweedie. It is surrounded by some beautiful grounds, and is the last of a chain of fortresses placed on the banks of the Tweed, which are seen every two or three miles in pursuing the course of the stream. The parish church stands on the Powsall rivulet, a little way above its junction with the Tweed. Acreage, 17,948; population in 1871, 221.

KIRKURD parish lies on the western confines of the county, and is bounded on the north by the Tarha, a tributary of the Tweed. From the first-named river the land rises in finely cultivated and enclosed grounds, and then becomes hilly, with eminences covered with thriving plantations. The ancient church of Kirkurd belonged at an early period to the bishops of Glasgow, one of whom gave it to the hospital of Solta, the property of which charitable institution it remained until transferred to the hospital of Trinity Church, Edinburgh. Acreage, 5,968; population in 1871, 294.

LYNE and MEGGET are two parishes ecclesiastically united, though not adjacent to each other. Lyne lies on the left bank of the stream of that name, while Megget is situated within the southern border of the county, near the head of Elbeck and Yarrow. It is a bleak, hilly, and pastoral district, intersected by the small stream Megget water, which falls into Saint Mary's Loch. Acreage, 17,227; population in 1871, 174.

MANOR parish is bounded by Peebles on the north and Megget on the south, and its northern extremity abuts on the Tweed. The district is the vale of the Manor water, which rises in its southern hilly quarter and falls into the Tweed about two miles west of Peebles. The parish formerly belonged to the Rector of Peebles, and is supposed to derive its name from being the Manor of that churchman. Several curiosities exist in this locality: among these the remains of a Roman camp, a tower raised on an eminence, supposed to have been erected as a watch-tower in early troublous times, and a huge upright stone, of great age, perforated with many holes. But the greatest attraction is, perhaps, the cottage once inhabited by the late David Ritchie, a deformed and eccentric dwarf, from whom, it is said, Sir Walter Scott drew the fictitious character of the "Black Dwarf," in his novel of that name. The cottage is situated in the vale near the public road to the farm standing called Woodhouse. Acreage, 16,632; population in 1871, 271.

SKIRLING is a small parish and village—the latter twenty-five miles west by south from Edinburgh, and two and a half north-west from Broughton, situated on the road from the city named to Leadhills. The parish is bounded on the north-east by Kirkurd, on the east by Broughton, on the south by Kilbucho, and on the west by Biggar. It extends about four miles in length from north to south, having a general breadth of one mile and a half, with hilly surface, but green and fertile, and well cultivated. Acreage, 3,423; population, 1871, 325.

STOBO is a generally well cultivated and planted parish in the western part of the county, lying for the most part on the left bank of the Tweed, and extending about six miles in length by four in breadth. The greater part of the parish is hilly and of a pastoral character; but adjacent to the Tweed and the Lyne the land is well cultivated, and some of it finely planted—the latter character of improvement especially in the grounds surrounding Stobo Castle, a modern and beautiful edifice, situated a short distance from the parish church, within view of the Tweed. Within the parish are extensive slate quarries, which, however, have not been wrought for some years. Acreage, 10,302; population in 1871, 459.

TWEEDSMUIR, about the middle of the 17th century, formed part of the parish of Drummelzier, when it was erected into a separate parish. It lies in the south-western corner of the county with Lanarkshire on its western border. There are several ancient and rude strongholds in the parish, some of them dignified by the name of "Castles," but having few features of the fortress character. Within the bounds of the parish the river Tweed is augmented by the streams of the Fruid and Talla. Acreage, 23,469; population, 1871, 190.

PERTHSHIRE.

THIS is one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, lying nearly in the centre of the kingdom, whose great northern and southern divisions it may be said in some measure to connect. It is bounded on the east by the county of Forfar; on the south-east by the counties of Kinross and Fife—from the latter county it is separated for a considerable distance by the Frith of Tay; further on the south its boundaries are Stirlingshire and the small county of Clackmannan, which latter it embraces on both sides; on the south-west Dumbarton touches it for a short distance; on the west it is bounded by Argyshire; and on the north-west and north by Invernesshire. The figure of the county is very irregular, being intruded upon by other counties in some quarters, and having many indentations and projections in other parts; but for these circumstances, its form would be nearly that of a perfect circle. From the Frith of Forth at Culross, on the extreme south, to the Forest of Athol, at the source of the Tilt, on the north, it measures sixty-eight miles; and from Meikle on the east, to Argyshire on the west, about seventy-seven miles. The contents of the area of this county are estimated at 1,664,690 acres, or 2,601 square miles.

EARLY HISTORY.—The monuments of antiquity which exist in Perthshire are sufficiently numerous to afford a field of curious investigation. Lying northward on the Roman wall, this shire was the theatre of the last struggle for independence which the inhabitants of the low country of Scotland made against the arms of their skilful and then invincible oppressors; the final and most distinguished battle fought by the Britons was that against Agricola, under a leader to whom the Romans have given the name of Calgacus. One of the roads formed by the invaders, passing along the district of Strathearn towards Perth, may still be traced, and also from Perth, along Strathmore, to the extremity of the county; the remains of several encampments, likewise, are at this day observable, particularly one at Ardoch, in the parish of Muthill, the largest and most conspicuous in Scotland. This shire also possesses antiquarian remains of a later age and history, in ruined towers and religious structures, the district having once been the residence of a number of powerful chiefs, and of a large body of churchmen. Before the Reformation and during the domination of episcopacy, Perthshire formed the ample diocese of a bishop whose seat was at Dunkeld, as well as another bishopric at Dunblane.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—Perthshire may be considered the Yorkshire of Scotland; like that immense county it is subdivided into districts, which previous to the jurisdictions established in 1748, were stewardries under the power of different great landed proprietors; the names of these various districts (or feudalities) are Menteith, Gowrie, Perth Proper, Strathearn, Stormont, Breadalbane, Rannoch, Balquhider and Athole. Little attention, however, is now paid to these divisions, and the county is arranged more naturally under the two extensive denominations of Highland and Lowland, the range of Grampians forming the line of demarcation. Eighteen parishes belong to the Highland portion, while that of the Lowland comprises fifty-eight. The soil of Perthshire comprehends all the varieties known in Scotland—the carse and loamy being prevalent on the banks of the rivers, and the sandy and tillable classes on the sides of the hills; in many places are extensive mosses, particularly in Menteith district. Within the last century there has been a great deal of planting in Perthshire, greatly to the amelioration of the climate and the advantage of the agriculturist. His Grace the late Duke of Athole acted a most distinguished part in the rearing of plantations; it appears from returns published in 1830, that he planted 15,473 English acres, the number of plants amounting to the enormous number of 27,231,600; of these plantations, the principal portion, to the amount of about 8,600 acres, are of larch, about 1,000 of oak, the remainder being of Scotch fir, spruce fir, a few acres of birch, &c. The same patriotic nobleman exerted himself most beneficially in the improvement of the roads of the county, which have been brought into excellent condition. During the present century a prodigious and most gratifying change has been effected in the agriculture of Perthshire, the low parts of which now vie in rural cultivation, wealth and beauty with any district in Scotland; the upper portion of the county is still devoted to the pasturage of sheep and cattle, which are mostly driven southwards for sale and consumption. The mountains of greatest altitude above the level of the sea in Perthshire are Ben Lawers, 4,015; Ben More, 3,903; Ben Gloa, 3,724; Schiehallion, 3,561; Ben Derig, 3,550; Ben Ardlanach, 3,500; Ben Ledi, 3,009; Ben Venue, 3,000; Ben Chonzi, 2,922; Farragon, 2,584; Ben Achally, 1,800; Birnam Hill (mentioned in Shakespeare's play of "Macbeth"), 1,580; Turlcum, 1,409; Bloir, 1,300; King's Seat, 1,196; Lochtown Hill, 1,172; Kimpurnie, 1,151; Beingloe, 1,040; Dunsinane (whereon was a stronghold of Macbeth, twelve miles from Birnam Hill), 1,024; Kinnoul, 700; and Barry, 688.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The subject of the mineralogy of Perthshire affords sufficient materials to excite and to reward the curiosity and research of the scientific student of the works of nature; but in a commercial or economical point of view its minerals are of no great importance. At Culross, upon the Forth, coal has been wrought for ages; but from its situation, it is of little advantage to this county. Limestone rocks are found in a variety of localities, both in the high and low country; but the use of lime is greatly impeded from the want of proper fuel for burning it—peat, which is the fuel of all the inland districts, being a weak and ineffectual agent in the process of calcination. Marble of a superior quality is worked near Gentilft; beds of fire-clay have been discovered near Culross, and in that neighbourhood, on the Devon, there is abundance of ironstone. About Callander that species of rock called breccia, or more familiarly, "plum pudding stone," is not uncommon; and here also, as in other parts, are various kinds of slate. A chain of sandstone runs from Gartree to the vicinity of Crieff; upon the Tay is one of the most celebrated stone quarries in this country; the principal stone of which the Grampians consist is granite. Perthshire abounds with game of nearly every description, though the large species is now considerably diminished in numbers; the red deer, or stag, may be said to inhabit the forests and mountain glades in the most perfect state of nature and wildness; it is cautious in the extreme, and singularly jealous of the human form, eluding with wonderful effect the wiles of the sportsman. A variety of other game are also inhabitants of these wilds; among the rest, the roe, a much more familiar animal than the stag, appearing, even in the summer, in the woodlands and plantations of the valleys, down to the habitable places. In regard to its natural features, Perth is esteemed a county of first-rate interest. From its inland situation, Perthshire of course does not comprise any combination of marine and mountain scenery, which form the great attraction of the West Highlands; yet, as it abounds in inland lakes, and possesses rising grounds of as grand a character as that district, it is in no respect inferior as the object of "a tour in search of the picturesque and beautiful," while its charming plains may be said to form an additional attraction. The principal pursuits of industry in the towns and villages of Perthshire is the weaving of linen goods, chiefly of coarse fabrics; in connection with this branch of manufacture, flax spinning mills and a considerable number of bleach fields are established. The manufactures of the county are not, however, wholly confined to that of linen; gingham and pullicates are produced at Perth, and cotton spinning works are in constant operation at Stanley and Doune; the woollen manufacture is carried on to a limited extent in two or three places in the shire; and considerable distilleries and breweries are found in several towns and villages. It may be remarked that the whole of this large and populous county exhibits in almost every portion manifestations of being in a thriving and prosperous condition, and affords a strong example of what has been effected during the last century, and a proof, in the civilization of the country, of the exchange of a life of almost savage strife, ignorance, and poverty for one of intelligence, peace, and all the comforts to be procured by industry.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—Like all elevated countries, Perthshire abounds with extensive lakes and rivers, which occupy valleys lying between lofty mountains. The chief running waters are the Tay, the Earn, the Garry, the Bran, the Almond, the Teath, the Allan, the Dochart, the Tummel, the Bruar, the Ercht, the Ardie, the Shee, and the Isla—besides innumerable third and fourth-rate rivers and streamlets of all sizes. The Forth, from rising in Stirlingshire, is not considered a Perthshire river, though it flows along a large portion of its south-west quarter. The chief lakes of the county are Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Ard, Loch Voil, Loch Lubnaig, Loch Dochart, and Loch Earn. Those are in the south-west part of the shire; Loch Tay in the centre of the mountainous district, and Loch Rannoch, Loch Ercht, and Loch Lydoch, the two latter in part only in the north-west quarter. In the lower divisions there are some smaller and less important lakes. The most remarkable mineral waters as yet discovered in this county are those of Pitcaithly, near the Bridge of Earn, which have been long famed for their efficacy in curing scrofula and complaints of the stomach. The county is intersected by the Caledonian, the North British, and the Highland railways, and from these main lines run many important branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Perthshire comprehends seventy-two entire parishes and twelve parts of parishes. The county is divided into ten districts, each under the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace court and a body of deputy-lieutenants; it is further divided into two sheriff-substituteries—the seat of the one being Perth, the other Dunblane. The shire contain only two royal burghs, Perth and Culross; the former returns one member to Parliament, and the latter is a contributory burgh, joining with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in sending another. The shire, in common with other Scottish counties, likewise has one representative in the Senate. The present member for the shire is Sir Donald Currie, K.C.M.G. The parliamentary constituency for 1881-82 was 6,006. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Athole, K.T. According to the census returns for 1871 the shire possessed a population of 60,663 males and 67,105 females; total, 127,768; in 1881 the numbers returned were—males, 61,516; females, 67,469; total 128,985, showing an increase in the ten years of 1,217. The inhabited houses at the latter period numbered 25,629; uninhabited 1,784; being built 140.

ABERFELDY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF WEEM AND DULL.

ABERFELDY is a thriving and neat village, partly in the parish of Dull, and partly in that of Logierait, 18 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, 9 W. from Logierait, and six N.E. from Kenmore; situated on the south bank of the beautiful river Tay, on the great Highland road, which crosses the river by a bridge, elegant and substantial, of three arches, constructed by the celebrated General Wade. This part of the county is justly recognised as the centre of the most beautiful scenes on the Tay, comprising mountain, dale, and wood, and the locality is likewise attractive from its proximity to the romantic falls of Moness. The village contains several establishments of business importance—these include branches of the Bank of Scotland Limited, Union Bank of Scotland Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, a woollen manufactory, &c. The village is well lighted with gas, and supplied with water. A sheriff's small debt court is held in the Breadalbane Academy, on the fourth Saturday of April, August and December, when claims are settled to any amount not exceeding £12. The Ballinluig and Aberfeldy branch of the Highland Railway terminates here. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in January (old style), on the Tuesday before Kenmore March fair; on the first Tuesday in April (old style), for horses and cattle; first Tuesday in May, for cattle and sheep; on the Saturday next before Amulree fair; on the first Friday in August (old style), and on the last Thursday in October (old style), for cattle and sheep. Population in 1871, 1,159, and in 1881, 1,287.

WEEM is an extensive Highland parish in the district of Breadalbane. It is so mixed up with and intersected by neighbouring parishes that no accurate idea can be given of its extent and boundaries. The surface is mountainous and rugged; it is watered by the rivers Tay, Lyon, Lochy, and Dochart. The church of Weem is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 34 N.W. from Perth, and 9 W. from Logierait. There is an Episcopal church (St. David's), built in the Norman style of architecture, at a cost of £2,000. It was the gift of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart., and friends. Near the church is Castle Menzies, the seat of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart. It is a handsome building, with lofty turrets, surrounded by fine plantations, pleasure grounds and orchards—a spot presenting a refreshing contrast to many other parts of the district. Near the castle is the Weem Hotel, an establishment admirably adapted for the reception of families and other visitors. It is sheltered from the north winds, and is placed in the midst of the most delightful and interesting scenery with which this locality richly abounds. Amongst the objects of interest in the immediate vicinity are Taymouth Castle, ruins of Garth Castle, Maggermie Castle, Birks of Aberfeldy, Falls of Moness, Achorn, and Keltney. The parish possesses an acreage of 41,887, and by the returns for 1871 a population of 520.

DULL is also a large parish, assimilating in its localities with Weem, so that a just estimate of its extent cannot be arrived at. It comprehends, however, a general length of thirty miles, by a breadth of about twelve. The river Tummel bounds the district on the north-east, and the Lyon and Tay on the south; which rivers abound with excellent salmon, and the lakes (of which there are fifteen, of large and small dimensions) abound with fine trout, pike and eels. The military road from Stirling to Inverness passes through the entire length of the parish. The church stands at APPIN, about two miles and a half west from Weem. The lofty mountain Schiehallion, which rises upwards of three thousand five hundred feet, is seen on the northern border, with its brow shrouded in mist. The village of Dull is situated two miles west from Castle Menzies, and was at one time the seat of a Roman Catholic college, of which no traces now remain. An Established church is in the village. The population of the parish in 1871 numbered 2,681, and the acreage was 63,417.

ABERNETHY AND ABERARGIE,

WITH THE PARISH OF DRON.

ABERNETHY is a parish lying partly in the county of Fife and partly in Perthshire. The village, said to have been the capital of the Pictish kingdom in Scotland, is scattered over a considerable space of ground, and eight miles S.E. from Perth, and fourteen N.W. from Cupar, in Fife, about half a mile south of the river Earn, near to its junction with the Tay. It is seated to the south of a spacious and rich agricultural dale, bounded by lofty hills, which are chiefly planted with timber. Some of the houses are tolerably well-built, but the only structure deserving particular notice is a circular tower, the only one of its kind (with the exception of that at Brechin) in Scotland. It stands in an angle of the burial ground of the Established church, and is about seventy-five feet high, and twenty-four feet in diameter at its base. The date of its erection is unknown, but tradition ascribes its origin to the Picts, who are said to have built it in one night, and that the stones of which it is constructed were removed from the distance of twelve miles, by a formed line, one man passing them on to another until the whole work was completed. On the outside of the tower is yet to be seen the jugs (a padlocked collar and chain), a memorial of the discipline to which offenders were subjected in bygone days. Abernethy is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, fifteen councillors, a treasurer, and a town clerk. The inhabitants are for the most part employed in salmon fishing and weaving. The parish of Abernethy is bounded by the river Earn on the north, on the east by Newburgh and Abdie, and on the south by Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo; it is between five and six miles both in breadth and length, comprising 9,544 acres, and besides the village of its name already described, contains the small one of Aberargie, situated about a mile to the west. A hill, situated a little to the north of Binns Farm, commands one of the finest views in Scotland, comprising Strathmore, Strathearn, the Grampians, Ochils, Sidlaws, Pentland Hills, Frith of Forth, Loch Leven Castle, Glen Farg, &c. A fair is held on the fourth Wednesday in May. In 1871 this parish had a population of 1,744, and in 1881, 1,714, and the village 884.

DRON, a parish in the south-western extremity of Perthshire, extending into the beautiful district of Strathearn, is divided from Abernethy on the east by the rivulet Farg. Although in some parts the surface is broken and irregular, in the lower parts the land is flat and fertile, being a portion of the rich case of the Earn. The church, a handsome Gothic edifice, is a fine object on the rising ground to the left, on approaching the Bridge of Earn from the south. This parish, which embraces an area of 4,188 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 343, and in 1881, 319.

CARRIER.

To PERTH, William Bett, Tuesday & Friday

ALYTH, GLENISLA, AND RUTHVEN.

ALYTH is a parish, and contains the thriving town of its name; the latter is 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20 N. from Perth, 17 N.W. from Dundee, 12 W. from Forfar, 5 from Blairgowrie, and 4 from Meigle, pleasantly situated at the base of a range of hills on the small river Alyth. The parish is mostly in the county of Perth, and extends into that of Forfar, and is divided into two considerable districts by the hills of Alyth, Loyal, Barry, and part of Mount Blair—a conspicuous point of land rising about twelve hundred feet above the level of the sea. The southern district lying in the Strath is about four miles long and three broad. This, as well as the tract of land towards the hills, is fertile and verdant, and watered by the river Isla and several small streams. The town has considerably improved since the completion of the railway in 1861. There are two mills employed in the manufacture of linen, which is carried on here to a considerable extent, and finds employment for a large number of the inhabitants. The new mill, erected by David Smith & Sons in 1873, is most complete, and in addition to the ordinary work, dyeing, bleaching, and calendering is carried on. Alyth was erected into a burgh of barony by James III., and a court was held on the first Tuesday in every month; but, owing to the increase of the town, it has been found necessary to adopt the Lindsay Police Act of 1861, and the town is now governed by a chief magistrate, who is an ex-officio justice of peace for the county, and eight commissioners. The town is plentifully supplied with good water. Being within an easy distance from Dundee, there are a number of visitors from that quarter during the summer months. The late Hon. William Ogilvy, of Loyal, left his large and valuable library for the benefit of the town and parish of Alyth.

Post Office, Tontie Street, William Robertson, Post Master.—Letters from Elinburgh, Glasgow, and the South arrive at seven and twenty-five minutes past ten morning; and are despatched at a quarter-past twelve noon and a quarter before six evening. Letters from Aberdeen and the North arrive at seven evening; and are despatched at ten night.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

* * Letters for Glenisla, Woodend, and Folda should be addressed "by ALYTH."

The Post town for Ruthven is MEIGLE.

BANKS.

BANK OF SCOTLAND, LIMITED (Branch), Market place—draws on their Branch, 43 Lothbury, & Coutts & Co. & Smith, Payne & Smiths, London—George S. Duncan, agent

He bequeathed the sum of £500 to support and perpetuate his gift—£300 to be expended in erecting a suitable building for its custody, the interest of the remaining £200 going towards the support of the institution. The places of worship consist of a parish church, an imposing edifice, with a lofty spire; a Free church and a chapel each for United Presbyterians and Episcopalians. The markets are held on the fourth Wednesday in January, February, March, April, and December; the third Tuesday in May, hiring, cattle and sheep; the second Tuesday in June (old style); the first Tuesday in August; and the first Tuesday and Wednesday after the 11th of November. The entire parish contains an acreage of 23,298. The population in 1871 numbered 3,352, of which 2,134 were returned for the town, in 1881 the parish possessed 3,372, and the town 2,377.

GLENISLA is a parish in the county of Forfar, lying to the west of Lentrathen, and extending about twenty-one miles in length. In general it is between six and seven miles in breadth. A great part of it is the vale through which flows the river Isla. The kirktown of Glenisla stands on the left bank of the river. A market is held here on the Thursday before the last Wednesday in September. The acreage is 41,242, and the population in 1871 was 925.

RUTHVEN is a parish situated on the north side of the vale of Strathmore, county of Forfar. It is about two and a half miles in length by about two in breadth. The river Isla enters Perthshire from this parish. Colonel Thomas Wedderburn Ogilvy, of Ruthven House, is the sole heritor. Acreage, 2,041; population in 1881, 195.

AUCHTERARDER,

ABERUTHVEN, BLACKFORD, TRINITY GASK, FINDO GASK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

AUCHTERARDER is a parish and seat of a presbytery—the town, a considerable one, and of some consequence in manufactures, is twenty miles from Stirling, and fourteen from Perth; situated on the high road between the latter city and Doune, on the south side of the river Earn (whose stream is famed for trout and salmon), and it is a station on the Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian Railway. The village, which at one period enjoyed the distinction of being a royal burgh, consists of one large street which extends nearly a mile in length, and is famous as the place where originated the disruption in the Church of Scotland, with the late Rev. Robert Young. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in weaving. There are two dye works in the parish. A new combination poor-house has been erected near Auchterarder, for the accommodation of this and fifteen adjoining parishes. The places of worship are an Established, a Free, and two United Presbyterian churches and a Roman Catholic chapel. The town also contains several good schools. The ruins of Kincardine Castle, the ancient seat of the Montrose family, are in the neighbourhood. The road to the castle from Auchterarder passes between the bellows and the forge of an ingenious blacksmith named Hally. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the last Wednesday in March, the first Wednesday in May, the Friday before the Fulkirk Michaelmas tryst, and the largest on the first Wednesday in December. Population of the parish in 1871, 3,795, and in 1881, 3,643.

ABERUTHVEN is a small village in the parish of and situated two miles north from Auchterarder, on the road to Perth. The village contains a Free church, and the ruins of an old church,

BLAIR ATHOLE,

WITH THE BRIDGE OF TILT AND STRUAN.

BLAIR ATHOLE is a small village and parish, included in the district of Athol or Athole. What is now designated the parish of Blair Athole formerly consisted of four parishes, viz., Blair, Lude, Kilmavconag and Strowan. The word Athole signifies pleasant land, and Blair of Athole, the name of the principal valley, means the field or vale of Athole. The district of Athole is forty-five miles in length, and thirty in breadth, and the parish is twenty-four miles from north-east to south-west, and twenty from north to south. It lies on the north-west Highlands of Perthshire, bounded on the south by Fortingal Foss and Moulin, and on the north by Inverness and Aberdeenshire, and on the east by Kirk-michael and Moulin, and on the west by Rannoch, and contains a large tract of Highland territory, the mountains of which are almost covered with large and beautiful woods, interspersed with fertile vales, which are in a high state of cultivation. The valley of the Garry, from the pass of Killiecrankie to the point of Strowan may be considered the nucleus of the parish. The principal lakes and rivers are Loch Garry and Loch Tummel, and the Tummel, Tilt, and Garry, all abounding with a variety of fish. The village is situated on the north side of the Garry, twenty miles north-west from Dunkeld, on the Inverness road, where there is a station on the Highland Railway.

Within a short distance of the village is the noble old Castle of Blair, the family residence of the Duke of Athole. The castle has been, within the last few years, restored to its original form, according to a design by Mr. Bryce, of Edinburgh, and the addition of towers and turrets adds much to its appearance. The woods in the neighbourhood are very fine, some of the larches being the oldest in Scotland. Three miles to the west of the village are the Falls of Bruar, consisting of a succession of cascades in a ravine of romantic beauty. The banks are covered with woods, planted by a late Duke of Athole, in answer to Burns's well-known "Petition of Bruar Water." Neat gas works have been erected, which at present supply the castle and hotel. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland Limited is in operation; and in the village are also two excellent hotels. The acreage of the parish is 181,114; and the population in 1871 was returned as 1,768, of which Blair Athole and Bridge of Tilt numbered 387.

In the parish of Athole is the beautiful little village of BRIDGE OF TILT, separated only from Blair Athole by the water of Tilt, which is crossed by a neat bridge, that gives the prefix to the name of the place. It consists of a few neat cottages, the Free church, and also the old Episcopal chapel of Kilmavconag; and its pretty rural aspect is embellished by the beautiful residence and grounds of J. P. McInroy, Esq. of Lude. Between the villages of Blair and Bridge of Tilt are situated the parish church, a plain but commodious structure, and the parochial school buildings, which have been much improved.

CALVINE is a hamlet in the parish. The scenery around is very charming, and includes Glen Tilt, the Falls of Fender, &c., all combining to interest the tourist. The principal heritor of the parish is the Duke of Athole.

STRUAN, or SROWAN, is a small village in the parish of Blair Athole, five miles north from the latter place, at which there is one of the parish churches. In the churchyard is a remarkable stone with a Runic inscription, very interesting to antiquarians.

BLAIRGOWRIE,

RATTRAY AND NEW RATTRAY, CLUNIE, BENDOCHEY, LETHENDY, KINLOCH AND PERSIE.

BLAIRGOWRIE is a parish containing the thriving town of its name—the latter 12 miles E. from Dunkeld, 5 w. from Alyth, and the same distance N. from Coupar-Angus; beautifully situated on the southern slope of the range of hills which bound the valley of Strathmore on the north, and at the mouth of the pass through which the great north road to Fort George (by the Spital of Glen-shee and the Castle town of Braemar) runs. The river Erich passes close to the town and propels the machinery of several flax-spinning mills on a large scale on both sides of the river; and there is also a linen manufactory. A branch of the Caledonian Railway from Coupar-Angus was opened in 1855, and by its means there is communication with most parts of the United Kingdom. Blairgowrie was created a burgh of barony in the year 1634, by a charter from Charles I. The affairs of the town are now governed by a baron bailie and eleven councillors, and by a board of police commissioners. A sheriff small debt court is held for the disposal of cases not exceeding £12 on the second Saturday in January, April, July and October. A police court sits when necessary. There are four branch banking establishments, two savings banks, and clubs for the votaries of angling, bowling, curling, &c. The places of worship are two Established churches, two Free churches, and chapels for Episcopalians, Independents, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. Blairgowrie parish is of an irregular form, about eleven miles in length, and three in breadth. It is divided into two districts by the Grampians, which rise immediately north of the town; the lower district is highly cultivated and fertile, while the upper is comparatively barren and moorish, with the exception of the banks of the river, which are good alluvial soil. The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very beautiful; and in the adjoining parish, about Craighall (the seat of Major-General James Clerk Rattray, C.B.), it is of the most romantic character, and is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland; the proprietor kindly permits strangers visiting the place to walk through the entire grounds free on Tuesdays and Fridays. To the lovers of angling no locality could be more suitable for enjoying this amusement, there being not only excellent trout and salmon fishing in the Erich and the Tay, the Isla and the burns of Lunan and Lornny (which are all within a moderate distance of the town), but likewise capital perch and pike fishing in the several lochs in the neighbourhood. On account of the inviting attraction around, the salubrity of the air, and the numerous lovely walks in the environs the town is much frequented in summer by families from more crowded places, who are happy to exchange the confined atmosphere which they usually inhale for the invigorating breezes of the country. Amongst the antiquities of the vicinity, the remains of the Castle of Glasunc must be noticed; they present a strikingly picturesque ruin, situated on the precipitous banks of a narrow wooded glen, about two miles from the town. Fairs are held at Blairgowrie on the third Wednesday in March, on the 26th of May (if it falls on Wednesday, if not on the first Wednesday after, the 23rd of July, the first Wednesday of November, the 22nd of November (or the first Tuesday after), and the Wednesday before Falkirk tryst; a market for cattle and grain is also held weekly on Wednesday, which is well attended. The annual Martinmas market, for hiring and cattle, is held on the 23rd of November, except Saturday, when the 23rd falls on a Saturday, Sunday or Monday. Population of the parish in 1871, 5,109; acreage, 15,303.

RATTRAY is a parish adjoining Blairgowrie, comprising the villages of Old and New RATTRAY. The former, pleasant but irregular in its buildings, is situated about three-quarters of a mile east from Blairgowrie. New Rattray is of modern erection, and is connected with Blairgowrie by a bridge of four arches crossing the Erich. The parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth. The surface is much diversified, the land on the banks of the river being arable and fertile, while the higher grounds are only suitable for pasture. On the banks of the river there are flax spinning mills, which afford employment to a large number of the inhabitants. To the south-east, on a rising ground called the Castle-hill, remain the vestiges of the ancient Castle of Rattray; and about two miles north of the village stands Craig Hall, on a rock that rises one hundred feet perpendicularly. The places of worship are an Established church built in 1820, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. Population of the parish in 1871, 2,610; acreage, 5,382.

CLUNIE parish lies about five miles west from Blairgowrie; it includes part of the lower range of the Grampians, which are barren, and covered with heather. The scenery, however, on the whole is romantic and pleasing, presenting abundance of wood and water. The loch of Clunie is one of the most beautiful small sheets of water in the country; within it is a small island, on which stands an ancient tower, the property of the Airlie family, which is supposed to have been the birthplace of the "Admirable Crichton," whose father, Sir Robert Crichton, Lord Advocate of Scotland, was then proprietor of the barony of Clunie. The tower is still in good repair, and partly furnished, though rarely occupied, but is open to strangers desirous of visiting it. On the northern side of the lake lies the charming property of Forneth, belonging to the Speid family. This parish, which embraces an area of 11,384 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 603.

BENDOCHEY is a parish in Strathmore, a few miles east of Coupar-Angus, bounded on the east by the river Isla, and is divided in two parts by the river Erich. It is twelve miles in length, and from six to eight in breadth. Population of the parish in 1871, 675; acreage, 9,368. There are seven small lakes in the parish.

LETHENDY, a small parish bounded by Caputh on the south, Clunie on the west, and Blairgowrie on the east, is about three miles in length by one in breadth. The land is arable.

KINLOCH is a parish, bounded by Clunie on the south, Blairgowrie on the east, and Bendochy on the north, extending about seven miles in length, by an average breadth of one and a half. There are three lakes in the southern division, namely, Fenzies Loch, Rae Loch, and Marlee Loch. The parish church is situated on the public road, on the south-east verge of the district. Lethendy and Kinloch parishes embrace 7,060 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 439.

PERSIE is an ecclesiastical parish taken from the parishes of Bendochy, Alyth, Meigle, and Blairgowrie.

BRIDGE OF EARN,

AND THE PARISHES OF DUNBARNY AND RHYND.

BRIDGE OF EARN is a village in the parish of Dunbarny, three and a half miles s. from Perth, its post town. This village, which has of late years become a great place of resort on account of the celebrity of its mineral spring, is situated on the great north road, and is a station on the Edinburgh and Perth section of the North British Railway. Pitkeathly Wells are situated about a mile and a half from the village, the waters having long been celebrated for affording relief to those afflicted with gravel, scurvy, &c. Moncreiffe House, the seat of Sir Robert D. Moncreiffe, Bart., is a fine mansion, the grounds of which are very extensive, and beautifully wooded, and present a refreshing contrast to other parts of the district. The scenery around is beautiful and romantic. In the neighbourhood are some interesting and attractive objects, the most remarkable of which are the remains of a Pictish camp on the summit of Mordon Hill. There is a Free church in the village, and the Parish church of Dunbarny is situated a little therefrom.

DUNBARNY (or Dunbarny) parish is situated in the south-eastern part of the county, occupying a rich portion of Strathearn district,

CALLANDER,

ABERFOYLE, BALQUHIDDER, BRIDGE OF TURK, LOCHEARNHEAD, PORT OF MENTEITH, RUSKIE, STRATHYRE, GARTMORE, TROSSACHS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CALLANDER is a modern and neat village and parish, and a burgh by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, 1862; 52 miles n.w. from Edinburgh, 40 s.w. from Perth, 45 n. from Glasgow, 16 n.w. from Stirling, 8 n.w. from Doune, and 5 n. from Thornhill; situated in a beautiful valley on both sides of the Teith, which river is here crossed by a bridge of three arches; the houses are disposed in regular plan, and covered with blue slates. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, both of which are handsome modern buildings; and there is also an Episcopal chapel. There is a Board school and also a Free church school. The town possesses a station on the Dunblane, Doune and Callander Railway, and the Callander and Oban Railway. The facility of railway communication has been the means of bringing thousands of visitors and tourists during the summer to enjoy the beautiful scenery of Callander and neighbourhood; and many first-class villas and cottages have been erected and fitted up to meet their requirements; the two first-class hotels—the Dreadnought and the M'Gregor's—also afford excellent accommodation to a large number. About a mile from Callander, and delightfully situated, is the establishment of the Callander Hydropathic Co., Limited, which was opened in June, 1882, and has convenience for about 130 visitors. The scenery around Callander is uncommonly beautiful; immediately above the village is a peculiarly lovely spot, formed by the junction of two little rivers, issuing respectively from Loch Lubnaig and Loch Venacher, which when united form the Teith. Callander may be reckoned the threshold of the Highlands in this quarter. Two miles west of the village is the pass of Leny, which affords access to a delightful range of mountain prospect; the bridge of Bracklyn is another fine point in the scenery directly surrounding Callander; and the ride to Loch Katrine and the Trossachs (classic scenes), about ten miles from the village, is extremely fine. The parish extends from the banks of the Teith to the Grampians, and is about sixteen miles in length by a breadth of ten. The low grounds are arable and fertile, but the upper country is wild and heathy. Callander has four annual fairs; namely, the third Thursday of March, May 16th, third Tuesday of July and third Thursday of December. The parish of Callander embraces an area of 51,186 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 1,870, and in 1881, 2,166; of this number the village contained 1,521.

ABERFOYLE, a parish (and the name of a celebrated pass or long valley between the Highlands and Lowlands), is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, its fine lakes and numerous streams, and the marked direction taken by the Grampians through the lower part of it, as well as for producing a great quantity of rare plants, suited to reward the researches of the botanist. The village, or "clachan" of Aberfoyle, is the scene of some fictions in the novel of "Rob Roy." At the head of the valley or pass lies Loch Ard, a bright and placid basin, embedded in surrounding woods, over which rises the gracefully towering form of Ben Lomond, one of whose summit platforms ascends upwards of 8,000 feet above the level of the sea. The best view of this noble eminence is obtained from a wooded promontory which juts out into the water (scarcely leaving room for the road that passes on to the westward), and which, it is said, was the spot on which the skirmish occurred, described in the above novel, where Helen Macgregor makes her first appearance. Loch Ard and Loch Chon, near Aberfoyle, are famous for their fishing, being considered the earliest fly fishing lochs in Scotland, fish taking readily early in March. Mr. Blair's hotel, the "Baillie Nicol Jarvie," affords excellent accommodation to tourists and visitors; there is also a good supply of boats in connection with the hotel for those piscatorially inclined. The Forth and Clyde Railway has a station here. Fairs are held within the parish on the first Friday in August, and the third Thursday in October. The parish of Aberfoyle contains an area of 26,800 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 482, and in 1881, 465.

BALQUHIDDER is a Highland parish, lying in the western extremity of the county, among the Grampians. The village is situated at the east end of Loch Voil, at the distance of thirteen miles from Callander, and is remarkable as the last residence of the famous Rob Roy, whose grave is pointed out in the churchyard. It was visited by Her Majesty and the Princesses Louise and Beatrice in 1869. The parish is altogether mountainous and pastoral, and from the number of acclivities forming its sides has obtained the popular appellation of the "Braes of Balquhiddier," by which name it is celebrated in Scottish song and legend. It comprises several lofty mountains, among which Ben More rises in conspicuous superiority, and likewise possesses many beautiful lakes, including Loch Doune, Loch Voil, part of Loch Lubnaig, and part of Loch Earn, with several of minor celebrity. Balquhiddier has an area of 54,675 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 743 persons, and in 1881, 759.

LOCHEARNHEAD is a beautiful little village in the parish of Balquhiddier, situated at the head of Loch Earn, from which it derives its name. This village has been twice visited by the Queen; the first time with the late Prince Consort in 1841, and again in September, 1869, in company with the Princesses Louise and Beatrice, who stayed at the hotel while on a visit to Sir Malcolm and Lady Helen M'Gregor, the chief of the M'Gregors, whose property, EDINCHIP, is within half a mile of the village. The Callander and Oban Railway possesses a station here, which passes high above the village, on the hillside looking down on one of the most magnificent views that can be imagined. The station is two miles distant from the hotel, owing to the steep incline required to get over the hill into Glen Dochart. The loch is an elongated sheet of water eight miles in length, one in breadth, and said to be one hundred fathoms deep; it is at the foot of Glen Ogle, a wild pass or outlet from the Breadalbane country, and the North-Western Highlands.

The beautiful situation and quiet character of the place, with the many objects of interest, and the fine scenery, attract many visitors, tourists, and private families during the summer months. The views from the oriel window of Mr. Dayton's magnificent hotel, command the fine scenery of the lake, the upper part of Strathearn, and the mountains, one of the latter (Benvoirlich) rises from the shore to a height of 3,900 feet. In the village is a Free church and two good schools. Excellent fishing may be had on the loch, free to parties staying in the hotel, and omnibuses meet all trains.

PORT OF MENTEITH (or Monteith) is a parish in the ancient district of Monteith, fifteen miles from Stirling. The chief object of attraction in the parish is the Loch or Lake of Monteith, a beautiful sheet of water near the centre of the district, adjoining the church and manse. It is about five miles in circumference, and is adorned by the small island of INCHMAHOLM, where stand the fine remains of a priory or monastery founded in 1233. The ruins of the church and cloisters are very extensive, and exhibit many fine specimens of fine old architecture of a massive nature. The archway entrance is very elegant. The dormitory and vaults have been for many ages the place of sepulture of many noble and ancient families. The ruins of these interesting buildings are sequestered in overhanging woods of considerable age and growth; some of the trees are said to be upwards of three centuries old. In this vicinity, on a gentle eminence, are seen the remains of what is still known as Queen Mary's Bower, where, after the disastrous battle of Pinkie, the young princess found a safe asylum till her departure for France. The boxwood bower, with its large hawthorn in the centre, where the youthful princess passed some of her happiest days, is still an object of interest to all who visit the island. In a smaller islet, a small distance from Inchmaholm, stand the ruins of the principal residence of the Earls of Monteith. The Monteith Hotel adjoins the loch, and is capable of affording excellent accommodation to visitors who wish to enjoy the beautiful scenery of the district. The village of GARTMORE and the small hamlets of RUSKIE and HAMMERSMITH are in this parish. Gartmore possesses a library, built and presented to his birthplace by Mr. John McDonald, a Glasgow merchant, the charge for membership being merely nominal—one shilling per annum. He also gives the rent of a house adjoining to assist in meeting current expenses. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,175.

STRATHYRE is a small village in the parish of Balquhadder, eight miles from Callander, and a station on the Callander and Oban Railway.

TROSSACHS (classic scenes) is a mountainous district in the west portion of the parish of Callander, and comprises the most magnificent lake and mountain scenery in Scotland. The church (a quoad sacra) and manse are about a mile and a half from Loch Katrine and eight miles from Callander. A short distance from the church is the Trossachs Hotel, an establishment well known to visitors and tourists, who come from all parts of the kingdom to enjoy the splendid scenery in the neighbourhood of the Trossachs, Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Vennacher, &c.

The BRIDGE OF TURK, made famous by the couplet—

And when the Bridge of Turk was won,
The headmost horseman rode alone, is a small hamlet in this parish, and contains a school, and the ruins of a very large and handsome hotel, which was unfortunately burned down some time ago.

COMRIE, SAINT FILLANS, AND MONZIEVAIRD.

COMRIE is a parish and village—the latter, respectable and populous, is 5½ miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 21 W. from Perth, and 6½ from Crieff; situated in a beautiful and romantic valley at the foot of the Grampians, and on the north bank of the Earn, at the junction of the Lednock. Loch Earn lies at the western extremity of the parish, and from it flows the beautiful Earn, along which there is a public road through the valley of Strathearn. In the village the manufacture of woollens is carried on to a limited extent. There is a ranch bank and a reading room, the latter well supplied with local and foreign papers, periodicals, &c. The beautiful scenery in the neighbourhood of Comrie and Saint Fillans attracts a considerable number of visitors during the summer. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church are the places of worship; the first mentioned is a handsome and modern building, with a five spire. In the neighbourhood are presented some interesting and attractive objects; the most remarkable are vestiges of Roman encampments on the plains of Dalginross, several druidical circles, and a monument of granite, seventy-two feet high, erected in 1815, to the memory of the late Lord Melville. There is also another memorial, formed of the same material, eighty feet high, to the memory of the late Sir David Baird. Five fairs are held in the year, namely, St. Kenach's on the 22nd of March, the first Tuesday in May, the 11th of July, the 8th of November, and the 4th of December. Comrie parish has an area of 60,593 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 1,911 and in 1881, 1,871; of this number the village had 1,698.

MONZIEVAIRD parish includes the abrogated parish of STROWAN. Thus united, it is bounded on the north by Comrie and Monzie, by

COUPAR ANGUS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BURRELTON, CARGILL, WOODSIDE, WOLF HILL, AND WASHINGTON.

COUPAR-ANGUS is a neat market town in the parish of its name, 15 miles N.W. from Dundee, 12½ E. by N. from Perth, and 4½ from Blairgowrie. It is a station on the Caledonian railway, and pleasantly situated on the Isla, a few miles above its junction with the Tay, on the main roads from Dundee to Blairgowrie and from Perth to Forfar. A branch of the Caledonian railway is now in operation from Coupar to Blairgowrie. A small stream, tributary to the Isla, divides the town into two parts; that portion which lies to the south of this rivulet is all that belongs to the county of Angus (or Forfar). In ancient times this place was the seat of an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Malcolm IV. in 1164, and endowed with considerable revenues by that monarch. At the Reformation this edifice, which was of considerable magnitude, was destroyed by a mob from Perth. The remains occupy part of the site of a Roman camp, said to have been formed by the army of Agricola in his seventh expedition. The town is compact and well built, and has the advantage of being lighted with gas, and considerable improvements have been made. The venerable steeple in Queen street is used as a clock tower. The street formerly called Abbey street is now Queen street, to perpetuate the remembrance of Her Majesty's transit through Coupar-Angus in 1849. Considerable quantities of linen fabrics are manufactured here. Two power loom factories are in operation, adding considerably to the prosperity of the place, and there are a tannery, two saw mills, and farina works in the neighbourhood. The Royal is the principal hotel here. There are three banking establishments, viz., branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland Limited, the Bank of Scotland Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland Limited. The town is governed by commissioners of police and police magistrates under the provisions of the Police Act of 1862. The municipal affairs of the town are administered by a board of nine police commissioners, of whom the chief commissioner is ex-officio a justice of peace for the county. A sheriff's small debt court is held on the Monday after the second Saturday in January, April, July and October. The parochial board is the local authority for sanitary affairs, and under their auspices the town is now plentifully supplied with good water from the estate of Pitcur, about two miles south from Coupar-Angus, which had hitherto been very unsatisfactory. The old parish church was an ancient building, but was so far decayed as to necessitate its being taken down. A larger and more elaborate edifice, in the Gothic style, has been erected on the site. The church has a large graveyard around it, in which are several tombs and monuments of venerable date; this edifice stands in Forfarshire. There is a Free church and four other places of worship not connected with the Establishment. A new public school was erected in 1876, with accommodation for upwards of 500 scholars. The parish of Coupar-Angus extends five miles along the east bank of the river Isla, varying from one to two miles in breadth; the surface, arable and meadow land, is well cultivated and enclosed. Though called Coupar-Angus, there is in reality but a small portion of the town or parish in the county of Forfar or Angus. The village of WASHINGTON is situated in the southern part of the parish. There is a market for grain, cattle, &c. every Thursday. Fairs, the third Thursday in March for horses and cattle; for horses, sheep and cattle the third Thursday in July; and a feeding market for servants on the Thursday after November 22nd. Coupar-Angus parish embraces an area of 4,699 acres. In 1871 the town contained a population of 2,149, and in 1881, 2,546.

WOODSIDE AND BURRELTON are villages lying close together in the parish of Cargill, on the road from Coupar-Angus to Perth, distant from two to three miles from the former place. There is a station of the Caledonian railway and a Free church at Woodside, and a public school at Burrelton.

CARGILL is a parish and village situated in the vale of Strathmore, the latter about five miles from Coupar-Angus and is a station on the Caledonian railway. The extent of the parish from east to west is about six miles, and from north to south about four miles, bounded on the south by Collieston and Saint Martins, on the west by the river Tay, on the north by Caputh and Coupar-Angus, and on the east by Coupar-Angus and Kettins. The rivers Tay and Isla join in the parish. WOLF HILL is a village in this parish. The church is a plain but substantial edifice erected in 1831, and there is also a public school. Cargill parish embraces an area of 9,495 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 1,411.

CRIEFF,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONZIE, FOWLIS WESTER AND MADDERTY, AND THE VILLAGES OF HARRIETFIELD, GILMORTON, BUCHANTY, LOGIEALMOND, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRIEFF is a parish, market town, and burgh, under the General Police (Scotland) Act, 1862. The town is 22 miles N. from Stirling, 17W. from Perth and 6½ E. from Comrie, situated in Upper Strath-earn, one of the most delightful districts in Scotland, on the southern declivity of a hill near the Grampians, having the Earn and several streams at the bottom, backed by hills, crags, and the Knock of Crieff, all of considerable altitude—the outposts of the ancient Grampians and the bulwarks of Scottish independence. Upper Strathearn occupies the mouth of an important pass at the Sma' Glen, where the Romans had a station, and where tradition lays the bones of Ossian, and points to a fragment of his displaced tombstone. It proceeds into the highlands of Perthshire, having a wild, mountainous region on the one side and rich soft vales on the other. Crieff is a thriving and increasing town, deriving no small advantage from the resort in the summer months of invalids and others, who are attracted by the beauty of the scenery and the salubrity of its situation. During the past few years a great improvement has been made by the erection of commodious villas for the accommodation of the better class of summer visitors. Crieff has for a century been lauded as the Montpelier of Scotland, and its salubrity of air and beauty of scenery go far to entitle it to this appellation. The healthiness of the locality is attested by the returns of the Registrar, which show that the mortality of the parish is lower than in any even of the rural districts of Scotland. As regards railway communication, Crieff is connected with the railway system of the country by the Crieff Junction and by the Methven and Crieff Railway, being branches of the Caledonian line. It is favoured, too, in being the seat of educational establishments of the first order. Among these is Morison's Academy, endowed by the late Thomas Morison, builder, Edinburgh, who bequeathed about £20,000 for this purpose. Out of this sum his trustees purchased the site on which the academy has been erected. It is intended to give a complete education to the sons and daughters of the middle classes—the departments being separate. It is conducted by a rector and a staff of assistants, and has attracted pupils from all parts of the kingdom. A new wing has been erected at the east end of the school buildings for the rector and for the accommodation of boarders. Taylor's Institution was founded and endowed by William Taylor, of Cornon, who died in 1841, and left his whole fortune "for educating the children of the poor in the most useful branches of education, and for the formation of a suitable library, with lectures on such branches of science as may interest the community at large, and tend to elevate their intellectual character and promote their temporal happiness." For these purposes a suitable building, with a house for the master, has been erected at the east end of the town. In 1867 the Strathearn Hydropathic Establishment was erected, at a cost of nearly £30,000. It occupies a splendid site in front of the Knock, and overlooks an extensive landscape of rich and varied beauty. Water of the finest quality is supplied at the rate of 20,000 gallons per day. The internal arrangements for the comfort and convenience of the visitors are admirable, and the success of the institution, under the able management of Dr. Meikle, has exceeded expectation. There is accommodation for about 200 visitors.

The principal branches of trade carried on here are the manufacture of fabrics in woollen, tanning and grain mills. The old Drummond Arms, in which Prince Charles Edward Stuart passed a night in 1745, was recently feued by the trustees of the late Lady Willoughby d'Eresby to the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, and premises for the bank and a large hotel have been erected. The buildings are among the most handsome in the town, and aid greatly to the appearance of the principal square in which they are erected. In the town are six branch banks and a Savings Bank, and two newspapers are published here—the Strathearn Herald and the Crieff Journal. A sheriff's small debt court is held quarterly on the first Saturday in February, May, August and November. The places of worship are the East and West Parish Churches, a Free Church, and others for United Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics and Baptists. The weekly market is held on Tuesday, and fairs are held on the first Tuesday of each month. The parish of Crieff contains 20,355 acres. The population in 1871, was returned at 4,598, and in 1881, 4,885.

The parish of MONZIE, which is about three miles north-east of Crieff, lies on the south side of the Grampians. It is a mountainous district, not above one-third part being arable—the remainder heath and moss. It is watered by the Almond, the Keltie and the Shaggy, upon which are several romantic cascades. The only inhabited portions of the district are two valleys, separated from each other by a ridge of hills four miles broad. The church is a modern building. Acreage, 21,487; population in 1871, 803.

FOWLIS WESTER is a large parish in the district of Strathearn, and lying north-east of Crieff. It is intersected by the river Almond, which here flows eastward to the Tay. Gilmorton and Buchanty are villages in this parish. Acreage, 22,803; population, in 1871, 1,161.

MADDERTY is a small parish about five miles east from Crieff. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Here are an Established church, a Free church and a public school. Acreage, 4,861; population, 523, and in 1881, 525.

Post Office, West High street, CRIEFF, Annie Bayne, Post Mistress.—Letters from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Stirling and the South arrive at twenty-five minutes past twelve night, and a quarter-past ten morning and seven evening, and are despatched at ten minutes before ten morning, twenty-five minutes before three afternoon and quarter-past six evening. Letters from Perth and the North arrive at twenty-five minutes past twelve midnight and a quarter-past ten morning and at seven evening, and are despatched at quarter-past seven morning, ten minutes past two afternoon and quarter-past six evening. Letters from Comrie and St. Fillans arrive at a quarter-past five evening, and are despatched at half-past five morning.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, FOWLIS WESTER, Daniel M'Diarmid, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Crieff) at twenty minutes past nine morning, and are despatched at twenty-five minutes to three afternoon.

Post Office, GILMORTON, Duncan M'Ara, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Crieff) at seven morning, and are despatched at four afternoon.

Post Office, MADDERTY, William Forbes, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Crieff) at half-past eight morning, and are despatched at twenty minutes past two afternoon.

DOUNE, DEANSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DOUNE is a respectable and thriving village in the parish of Kilmadock and district of Monteith, 44 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 3½ S.W. from Perth, 19 S. from Crieff, 9 N.W. from Stirling, 8 S.E. from Callander, 4 N. from Thornhill, and the same distance W. from Dunblane. The Dunblane, Doune and Callander Branch of the Caledonian railway possesses a station here. The town occupies a pleasant situation on the north bank of the Teith, and consists principally of three streets, radiating from a centre, where the market cross stands. Doune was formerly noted for its manufacture of Highland pistols, which has long become extinct. The cotton manufacture is carried on; and there are established in Doune branches of the Union Bank of Scotland Limited, and Royal Bank of Scotland.

In 1856 a new parish church was erected; its style is Gothic, with a handsome tower; the interior is ornamented with a beautiful pulpit, particularly worthy of notice. For this public work the parishioners are indebted to the Earl of Moray, the patron and chief heritor of the parish, and owner of Doune Castle, once the family seat of the Earls of Monteith. The ruins of this once noble castle stand in the immediate neighbourhood, upon an elevated peninsula formed by the junction of the Ardoch water with the Teith. To judge from the massiveness and extent of its remains, the castle appears to have belonged to that first-rate order of Scottish fortresses of which those of Edinburgh, Stirling and Dumbarton afford entire specimens. There still remains one huge square building, the walls of which are forty feet high, and ten feet thick, with a tower which rises above the rest to the height of eighty feet, ascending proudly over the lofty trees that encompass the place, and overlooking a country eminent in beauty and fertility. The old bridge which crosses the Teith a little above the Castle was erected by Robert Spital, a native of Stirling, who had amassed a fortune as tailor to Princess Margaret of England, widow of James IV. This bridge was widened by three feet in 1866. The Princess Margaret was a frequent inhabitant of Doune Castle, and the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots, is said also to have resided some time in it. In October, 1875, was opened a new Roman Catholic Chapel at a cost of about £3,300 which will seat 300 worshippers. The parish of Kilmadock comprises a district of great fertility; the land upon the banks of the Forth and Teith produces abundant crops of every description of grain. From the level margin of the former river the ground rises gradually to the Grampian mountains, which form the northern boundary of the parish; the face of the country here is delightful, with many romantic features. A short distance from Doune is the small village of DEANSTON, mainly supported by the cotton manufactures before mentioned. Fairs are held in Doune on the second Wednesday in May, the last Wednesday in July, the first Tuesday and Wednesday and the fourth Wednesday in November. The acreage of the parish of Kilmadock is 24,521, and the population in 1871 numbered 3,170, and that of Doune 1,262; in 1881 Doune contained 989.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE DUNBLANE, DOUNE AND CALLANDER BRANCH OF THE CALEDONIAN LINE.

Station, at DOUNE—Duncan Dewar, station master

DUNBLANE,

A burgh by the adoption of Police (Scotland) Act, is a small ancient city, in the parish of its name, and is the capital of the western district of Perthshire, 41 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 33 N.E. from Glasgow, 28 S.W. from Perth, 11 from Callander, and 4 from Doune, charmingly situated on the banks of the river Allan, which flows through a great part of the parish, and affords excellent sport to the angler, there being a good supply of trout, besides salmon and grise in their season. Dunblane is much resorted to in the summer season as a watering place, there being an excellent mineral spring on the property of the Hon. Captain Arthur H. Drummond, of Cromlix, in the vicinity of the town. This spring has been acquired by the Dunblane Hydropathic Company Limited, who are proprietors of a large establishment capable of accommodating 200 visitors. The Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian Railway passes through and has a station in the town, and the Dunblane, Doune and Callander branch commences here. Dunblane was formerly the see of a bishop founded by David I., and the great object of attraction in the present day is what was once the Cathedral, the choir of which is now the parish church, all the other parts of the edifice being in a state of decay. It stands on an eminence on the eastern bank of the Allan, overlooking the town, and is a large Gothic structure, with a steeple of modern erection, one hundred and twenty feet in height. That part of the town which adjoins the church, from its being composed chiefly of old, dignified-looking houses, exhibits the appearance of what is termed the "Close," or the precinct of the Cathedral. The good and learned Leighton, whose fame is in all the churches, was at one time Bishop of Dunblane, and bequeathed his valuable library to the clergy of the diocese. The books are kept in a suitable building called the Leightonian Library, to which the public have access on easy terms.

Dunblane is a place of limited trade, and not conspicuous as one of manufactures. Worsted spinning is carried on very extensively by Messrs. Alexander Wilson & Co. at their mills, Springbank, which gives employment to a great number of the inhabitants. There is also a small mill for the manufacture of woollen cloth, and others for wool spinning in the parish, and a few of the inhabitants are employed in handloom weaving. In the High street are branches of the Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. This place is the residence of a sheriff substitute and other functionaries. A sheriff court for the recovery of small debts and for ordinary business is held every Wednesday, and justice of peace courts occasionally. The court-house and prison are modern buildings, conveniently to their respective purposes. The places of worship are the parish church (before noticed), a Free church, an United Presbyterian and a handsome Episcopal chapel. There are three public schools—an infants' school, and one belonging to the Episcopal church. The country to the south of the town is very beautiful, and is finely ornamented with plantations.

The ride from Dunblane to Stirling is much and justly admired. The vale of Strathallan, through which flows the river Allan, lies to the north and east of the town. The fields on the banks of the river are fertile, but as the grounds approach the hills they are of a moorish character, although excellently adapted for the purpose of pasture, the dairy produce of this district being in high repute. At the lower end of the town is the romantic walk of Kippenross, near to the end of which is a plane tree, supposed to be the largest in Scotland, the circumference of the trunk in the smallest part being nearly twenty feet; where the branches separate, fully twenty-seven feet, and close to the ground forty-two feet seven inches. The height of the tree is a hundred feet, and has attained the age, it is said, of four hundred and seventy years. About half-way between Dunblane and the Bridge of Allan is Keir House, which was the residence of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell, Bart., M.P. The grounds are laid out with great taste, and contain fine specimens of forest trees and ornamental flower gardens. They are kindly thrown open to visitors from two to six on Friday. On the river Allan, about two miles north of Dunblane, is situated the recently erected small village of Ashfield, where are situated extensive works belonging to the well-known firm of Messrs. Pullar and Co., dyers, &c.

A few miles from the town is Sheriffmuir, on which a severe conflict took place in November, 1715, between the royal forces, under the Duke of Argyle, and the rebel army, commanded by the Earl of Mar. Here on the summit of the hill are some large stones enclosed by iron rails, said to be placed where the standard was erected. Prince Charles arrived at Dunblane on the 11th of September, 1745, on his way to the low country, and remained a night at the house of the Laird of Balhaldie. The room in which the prince held his levee, on the morning of his departure, is courteously shown to the enquiring visitor. Dunblane bestows the title of viscount on the Duke of Leeds. There was formerly a market held here and numerous fairs, but they have all fallen into disuse. Dunblane parish has an area of 18,543 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 2,765; and the village numbered 1,921; in 1881 the population of the village was 2,186.

Post Office. DUNBLANE, Margaret Dawson, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive at half-past seven morning, and are despatched at twenty minutes past four afternoon and ten minutes past eight evening. Letters from the North arrive at ten minutes before five and twenty minutes past eight evening, and are despatched at seven morning and ten night. Letters from Killin, Lochearnhead, Strathrye &c. arrive twenty minutes past four afternoon, and are despatched at five minutes before nine morning.

DUNKELD,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CAPUTH, DOWALLY, LITTLE DUNKELD, AND VILLAGES OF BIRNAM, BUTTERSTONE, DALGUISE, DRUMOUR, GILLYBURN, MEIKLEOUR, MEIKLE TROCHRY, MURTHLY, SPITALFIELD, INVER, STRATHBRAAN, AND TORWOOD.

DUNKELD is a small but interesting and handsome town and burgh of barony, partly in the united parishes of Dunkeld and Dowally, and partly in that of Caputh; 57 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, by rail 60 miles, 24 E. from Kenmore, 15 N.W. from Perth, and 12 W. from Blairgowrie; delightfully situated in the bosom of an amphitheatre of hills, at the spot where the highlands and lowlands appear to meet, and where the Tay first escapes from mountain fastnesses to the smiling land to which it contributes so much additional fertility and beauty. The town is of great antiquity, and was the capital of ancient Caledonia. The monastery of the Culdees is noticed so early as 729, and is recorded to have been built by Constantine, third king of the Picts. David I. in 1127, converted it into a bishopric. The first bishop of this see whose name appears prominently in history is the heroic William Sinclair, who assumed the mitre in 1312. He built the choir, succeeding bishops building other portions until it was finished in 1460. It is stated that in 1560 it was destroyed and left a ruin by an order from the Privy Council of Scotland. In 1762 the government gave £300 towards the restoration of the choir, and a further sum of £1,000 in 1815, to which the Duke of Athole added £5,000, for the purpose of converting it into a parish church. The other parts of the cathedral have been abandoned to the operations of time and the seasons, and have sunk into a state of dilapidation. In the early part of the sixteenth century the see of Dunkeld was occupied by the learned Gavin Douglas, a younger son of the Earl of Angus. The situation of the cathedral, in the midst of a fine grove on the left bank of the Tay, must highly interest the contemplative stranger. There is also a Free church, a neat and substantial edifice, erected in 1874, on the site of the old one, with tower and spire, which cost upwards of £2,000. The interior is ornamented by a handsome stained glass window in memory of the Earl of Dalhousie, the whole of the funds being raised by public subscription. The scenery which surrounds Dunkeld has long been the subject of admiration. Nature has been bountiful to this district, and her favours were duly appreciated and skilfully assisted by the late noble proprietor, the Duke of Athole, who conducted his operations and embellishments with such consummate taste as to produce one of the most beautiful and picturesque retreats to be found in Scotland, and which has long been the resort of tourists and visitors. Excellent accommodation is furnished by two very extensive and superior hotels, the Duke of Athole Arms and the Royal Hotel. The Bridge of Tay, at this place, is a magnificent structure of seven arches, the total span of which is 685 feet, its breadth 27 feet, and its greatest height from the foundation 54 feet. Its erection was commenced in 1806, and completed in 1809, at a cost of upwards of £30,000; £5,000 of which was contributed by Government, and the remainder disbursed by the late public spirited nobleman. The bridge was constructed chiefly on dry land, and the river afterwards turned to flow through its finely formed arches. The view from this bridge is, in every direction, remarkably fine. Near the town is a seat of the noble family of Athole, the gardens belonging to which, the cascades, the extensive pleasure grounds, and the lovely scenery, are most attractive objects; among these, Ossian's Hall, the rumbling bridge, and several falls of the river Bran, are pointed out to the visitor. In these grounds are two very fine trees called "the mother larches," being the first grown in Britain; they were planted in 1737, and are 100 feet high, one of them measuring 15 feet in circumference at three feet from the ground. A very handsome fountain was erected in 1866 by the inhabitants and a few friends, as a mark of respect and esteem to George Augustus Frederick John, sixth Duke of Athole, who died in 1864. The manufacture of linen goods was formerly the staple trade of Dunkeld, but has now become extinct. Productive slate quarries are worked by Mr. John Robertson, of Dunkeld. There are branches of the two following banking establishments settled here, namely, the Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. Dunkeld is a burgh of barony, and as such is governed by a baron bailie, who is appointed by the Duke of Athole. A sheriff small debt court is held on the third Wednesday of April, August and December, for the recovery of sums not exceeding £12; and a justice of peace court for the recovery of sums not exceeding £5, and for granting publicans' certificates, game dealers' licences, &c. James VI. made a grant for erecting a grammar school, called the Royal School of Dunkeld, which still exists. There is also a school for the education of females, erected by the Duchess of Athole, 1855, at a cost of £1,200, which is a handsome building situated in the Market-place. The City Hall in Athole-street, is a neat stone building, furnished with a gallery, and capable of accommodating 350 persons. The funds were raised by the assistance of the present Duke of Athole, the gentry in the neighbourhood, and the inhabitants. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the 14th of February, 5th of April, and on the 20th June; should any of these fall on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fairs take place on the following Tuesday; another is held on the second Tuesday in November. Population in 1871, 783 and in 1881, 768.

CAPUTH is an extensive parish and small village, five miles east from Dunkeld, lying on the banks of the River Tay. Here is an Established church. BUTTERSTONE, SPITTALFIELD, and MEIKLEOUR are small villages in this parish, from three to five and a half miles distant. Acreage of parish, 19,489; population 2,142.

DOWALLY is a large parish, situated about five miles from Dunkeld. The present church was erected in 1818, nearly on the site of the one erected by Bishop Brown. A number of old stones have been made use of in erecting the new building, amongst which is one bearing the arms of Bishop Brown, the original founder, a tombstone to the memory of one of the Dalguise family, and a stone in the shape of a bell. KINDALLACHAN is a small village in this parish, population in 1881, 430.

LITTLE DUNKELD, contrary to its distinctive appellation, is an extensive parish, lying on the west or right bank of the Tay, opposite to Dunkeld above described. The village is situated at the south end of the bridge which carries the road across to Dunkeld. The parish forms a kind of irregular triangle, and is disposed by nature into three districts—the district of MURTHLY, extending from Kinclaven to the village of INVER. DALGUISE, GILLYBURN, INVER, MEIKLE TROCHRY, MURTHLY, DRUMOUR, STRATHBRAAN and TORWOOD are small villages in the parish of Little Dunkeld, situate from one to six miles distant. Murthly Castle, in this neighbourhood, is a fine structure in the Elizabethan style of architecture. At Murthly is situated the Perth District Lunatic Asylum. It is a fine square building, surrounded by beautiful grounds, which are kept in order by the patients. Murthly and Dalguise are stations on the Highland Railway. The surface of this district is beautifully varied, its soil fertile, and generally well enclosed and cultivated; it is adorned by Murthly Castle, the seat of the Stourts of Grandtully, and by Birnam Hill, rendered classical by Shakespeare, and rising in rude magnificence from the edge of the river. The parish is traversed by the military road from Perth to Inverness.

BIRNAM is a small village in the parish of Little Dunkeld, and situated about three quarters of a mile from Dunkeld on the opposite side of the rivet Tay. The village has a very clean appearance, and contains several large and substantial buildings, the ground floors being occupied by various tradesmen, and the upper stories as dwellings. The Highland Railway Station (Dunkeld) is situated here. The Birnam Highland games, which are held on the last Thursday in August, attract large numbers of spectators. The Birnam Hotel, of which Mr. John B. Pope is the proprietor, is a building in the Saxon-Gothic style, surrounded with fine pleasure grounds and contains a public hall, perhaps one of the finest in the kingdom. The Episcopal Church (St. Mary's) is a handsome building, built in the Gothic style of architecture, with tower and bell. The second district of Little Dunkeld extends from Inver, along the banks of the Tay to Grandtully, a space of ten miles; here the fields are level, and the whole has the appearance of an almost continued series of beautiful gardens. The third division, which is separated from the second by a hilly tract of considerable elevation, is a valley of about nine miles in length; the soil is generally of a fertile clay or loam, grey freestone, and slate. The mineral productions that have been hitherto discovered in the parish are confined to lead ore and argillaceous earth. The productive slate quarries of Birnam are worked by Mr. John A. Harris. The population of the village in 1871, was 530 & in 1881, 480.

DUNNING,

FORTEVIOT, FORGANDENNY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNNING is a rather extensive parish, containing a neat village of its name, the latter nine miles s.w. from Perth, and five E. from Auchterarder; situate near the centre of the district, on the banks of the Dunning water (a tributary of the Earn), half a mile north of the base of the Ochill range of hills, and about two miles from the river Earn. The village, which contains a number of good houses, is under the control of a baron bailie. The places of worship are the parish and Free churches, and United Presbyterian and Episcopalian chapels. The steeple of the parish church is of very ancient date, and is supposed to be of Pictish origin. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established in the village. This place was destroyed by fire by the Earl of Mar's army, on the retreat from Sheriffmuir to Perth. A thorn, planted at that time in the centre of the ruins, is still to be seen, and from its shape, size and appearance at once attracts the stranger's attention. It is recorded that at the conflagration of the village, only one house escaped (which is still standing), and that by an ingenious device on the part of its owner, a female, who, while the rest of the cottages were in flames, threw parcels of wet straw any refuse of flax on the fire within the house, which raised such a smoke round this particular dwelling, that, believing it to be in a fair way of demolition, the soldiers did not molest it. A corn market is held every Wednesday. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in April, on the 20th of June, and on the Monday before the first Tuesday in October. The parish comprises 14,855 acres, and contained in 1871 a population of 1,832 and in 1881, 1,635.

FORTEVIOT is a parish in the district of Strathearn and the greater portion in the vale of Earn; the river of that name passing through it. The middle portion is beautifully wooded and enclosed, and is intersected by the May, which joins the Earn nearly opposite Dupplin Castle. The village of Forteviot, which is situated on the right bank of the last-named stream, is an ancient capital of the Pictish kingdom, but nothing now remains to mark a royal seat. At Bankhead, near Dupplin Castle, an ancient cross may be seen, and one also on the opposite height of Dromochy, both of which are supposed to mark the approaches to Hally Hill, where, in the time of Charles I., vestiges of a palace were in existence. It was on the heights here that the battle of Dupplin was fought. The river May, before mentioned, winds through the verdant knolls of the Ochills, and thence through the picturesque grounds of the Invermay, flowing on and forming several beautiful falls, until it becomes lost for a time in the intricate course of the Hummel Bummel, a cataract at Mackarey Linn, that tumbles for more than thirty feet in a perpendicular fall into a romantic glen. About three hundred yards from the village is a station belonging to the Scottish Central Railway. Acreage of the parish 7,786; population, 667 and in 1881, 618.

FORGANDENNY is a parish and a village, the latter about four miles south from Perth, five miles east from Dunning, and three west Bridge of Earn. The village is very small, and contains an Established and a Free church, and a parochial school. There is a station on the Caledonian line, about one mile distant. Acreage 8,946; population, 632; and in 1881, 627.

ERROL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD, SAINT MADDOES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ERROL is a parish in the Carse of Gowrie, 5½ miles in length and nearly three in breadth, stretching across the carse from the foot of the hill to the banks of the Tay. The soil is rich and fertile and under most productive tillage; it is also highly favourable to the growth of fruit trees. The country is intersected with small tracts of water called "pows," collected chiefly from the trenches opened for draining the grounds. As the tide and current in the Tay were making great encroachments, the proprietors of the land found it necessary to build strong walls to arrest their usurpation. It is recorded that this district receives the name of Errol, signifying an eastern landmark, from the circumstance of the family of Hay, who, having fought gallantly at Luncarty, received for their services from the king a gift of as much land in the Carse of Gowrie as a hawk flew over. Be this account correct or merely as a traditional legend, it is certain that the noble family of Hay take the title of Earl of Errol from the appellation of the parish. The small village named after it is 10 miles of Perth, occupying a beautiful situation on a rising ground, embowered in trees, commanding a prospect of the Tay and Carse almost as far east as Dundee. A rivulet flows past to the Tay, and forms a small harbour at its mouth; and about a mile from the village is a station on the Caledonian Railway. The village is gas-lighted. The parish church is a very handsome building on a commanding site; the tower may be seen at a considerable distance; there is also a substantial and capacious Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. Acreage of the parish, 9,507; population in 1871, 2,504, and in 1881, 2,421. ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD and ST. MADDOES are all parishes in the Carse of Gowrie, and varying in distance from five to nine miles from Perth.

POST OFFICE, Railway Station, ERROL, Elizabeth Adam, Post Mistress.—Letters from Edinburgh, Perth, the West and Ireland, &c. arrive at midnight and twenty minutes before ten morning; and are despatched at twenty-five minutes past three afternoon and twenty-five minutes past six evening. Letters from the East arrive at twenty-five minutes past three afternoon and half-past six evening and are despatched at twenty minutes before ten morning and at half-past twelve night.

FORTINGAL,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF KINLOCH-RANNOCH AND KELTNEY BURN.

FORTINGAL is a parish in the district of Breadalbane. The village, a small one, is 84 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 42 N.W. from Perth, 15½ N.E. from Killin, 5½ S.W. from Dull, and 5 W. from Kenmore, situated on the left bank of the river Lyon, about three miles from its junction with the Tay. The parish lies in the midst of the Grampians, and is only useful for pasture. Including the abolished parish of Kilehonan, it extends 37 miles in length by 17 in breadth, occupying a large tract of Highland territory in the north-west part of the county. The district abounds in lakes, rivers, and woods; the chief of the former being Loch Rannoch, about 11 miles in length, whose banks are finely wooded. A yew tree in the burial ground is said to be upwards of 2,500 years old. There are the remains of a Roman camp on the Hough of Fortingal. Not far from the southern bank of the lake are the barracks called GEORGETOWN.

POST OFFICE, FORTINGAL, Jessie Campbell, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Aberfeldy) at twenty-five minutes past two afternoon, and are despatched at half-past two.

The nearest Money Order Office is at ABERFELDY.

KENMORE,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF ACHARN.

THE parish of KENMORE lies in the Highland district of Breadalbane, surrounding the large and beautiful lake of Loch Tay, which is 16 miles in length, varying from one to two in breadth. The waters of the lake, which seldom or never freeze, abound with salmon and other fish. The clean little village of Kenmore, with its kirk and white cottages, occupies an eminence at the north-east end of the loch, close by the point where it opens into a river, over which is thrown a handsome bridge of five arches. The village is 80 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.W. from Perth, 24 W. from Dunkeld, 16 N.E. from Killin, and 5 E. from Fortingal. In the vale below the village are the park and castle of Taymouth, the magnificent seat of the Earl of Breadalbane. The mansion, some years since, was much enlarged and improved, and it now ranks amongst the most elegant modern castellated mansions in Scotland. This is a favourite point in a tour of the Highlands, and hence is much visited in summer. The district comprises objects both sublime and beautiful; amongst the former is the majestic mountain, Ben Lawers, which rises on the north-east side of the loch to the height of 3,945 feet. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March and on the 2nd of November (both old style), and the 28th of June, the 26th July, the 17th of September, and the 21th December. The parish contains an area of 67,196 acres, and in 1871 a population of 1,615.

ACHARN is a small village in Kenmore parish, situated about two miles from the village of Kenmore, on the east side of Loch Tay. Near the village, in a woody glen, are the celebrated Fall of Acharn. The Breadalbane family have built a grotto (called the "Hermitage"), opposite to the greatest fall, where the water suddenly precipitates itself over the projecting rock, a distance of about 250 feet.

KILLIN,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CLIFTON.

KILLIN is a mountainous and extensive parish in the Highland district of Breadalbane; the village, a small one, is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.N.W. from Stirling, 27 W. by N. from Crieff, 22½ N. from Callander, 16 S.W. from Kenmore, and 8 from Loch Earn Head, occupying a delightful and picturesque situation at the west end of the celebrated Loch Tay, and near the confluence of the rivers Lochy and Dochart with the waters of the lake. The Callander and Oban branch of the Caledonian railway has a station about four miles distant. This line is one of the finest in Scotland for grandeur of scenery. Anglers residing at the hotel have the privilege, under certain conditions, of fishing in the Loch. On a small island, formed by two branches of the river, and much in the shape of a coffin, is the burial place of the M'Nab clan. On one of the trees of the island may be seen a branch, which, severed from its parent stem by a storm in February, 1806, attached itself to a neighbouring tree, and is now growing with its branches downwards. A small eminence in the neighbourhood of Killin is pointed out as the place of sepulture of the famed Highland hero, Fingal. The village is noted for the picturesque beauty of its situation, and, like Kenmore, is a favourable point of tour of the central Highlands. Besides Killin there is another village in the western part of the parish, called CLIFTON. To view the scenery of this district to advantage, the traveller is advised to take the road on the south-east side of the lake; and in passing down its banks it is worth while to stop a little at a woody glen, where the family of Breadalbane have built a grotto opposite to a cascade, which is very well deserving of attention. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, the 5th and 12th of May, the Friday before Doune first of November fair, and the first Tuesday in November (old style). Acreage of Killin parish, 96,926; population in 1871, 1,836, and in 1881, 1,379.

KINCARDINE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF TULLIALLAN AND CULROSS.

KINCARDINE (or Kincardine-on-Forth) is a sea-port town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Tulliallan, 22 miles s. from Perth, 15 w. from North Queensferry, 10 w. from Dunfermline, six w. from Torryburn, and five n. from Alloa; situated in the southern detached part of the county, on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. At one time this place was called West Pans, from the salt works established in it, but these have long ceased to exist. There is a Branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, established here. There are rope, canvas and sail cloth, and worsted and woollen manufactories. There is a commodious harbour and an excellent quay, which, together with the good anchorage ground on the Forth, renders this haven an eligible refuge for vessels in distress; the harbour will admit vessels of from three hundred to four hundred tons burthen. The town is irregularly built; there are some good houses, but the streets are narrow, and the trade has considerably decreased of late years. The church, erected some years ago, is a very handsome and ornamental structure; the other places of worship are a Free church and United Presbyterian church. The old church remains standing in the burial ground, and is an interesting ruin, the steeple, however, being perfect. The principal seat in the district is Tulliallan Castle, from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded. A fair is held in Kincardine on the last Friday in July (old style). The parish of Tulliallan contains 3,588 acres. The population in 1871 was 2,184; and in 1881, 2,000; the town of Kincardine numbering 1,860.

CULROSS is an ancient town and representative burgh in the parish of its name, four miles from Kincardine, situated partly on the acclivity of a hill rising from the Forth, the principal street running north from the shore. An extensive traffic in salt and coal was at one time carried on here, and one hundred and seventy foreign vessels have been at one time in the roads. The Earl of Dundonald erected some very extensive works for extracting tar, naphtha and volatile salt from coal, but the speculation proving unproductive it was abandoned. Culross was erected into a royal burgh by James VI. in 1588; it has a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and councillors. It unites with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dunfermline in returning one member to Parliament. The town and its vicinity possess many objects of antiquity. In 1217 a monastery was founded on the rising ground behind the town by Malcolm, Thane of Fife; considerable remains of this structure are yet extant. On the north side was the abbey church, which had a tower in the centre; the latter is still entire, as is also a part of the church, which is now used for public service. In a recess of a mausoleum, erected in 1642 in honour of Sir George Bruce, are recumbent figures of Sir George and his lady, in beautiful white marble, and along a low settle are arranged their eight children in a kneeling posture. To the west of the town, on the bank of the Forth, is the ruin of Dummarle (the castle near the sea), an ancient stronghold of the Macduffs, and according to tradition the scene of the murder of Lady Macduff and her children. The present house of Dummarle is a handsome modern edifice, which owes its striking castellated appearance to the late Mrs. Sharp Erskine, who also erected in the grounds a beautiful mortuary chapel, within which she is interred. There is a museum in the house, wherein are some beautiful paintings, rare old china and other articles of virtue, to which, and the extensive grounds, the public are admitted on certain days of the week. Near the abbey church is a school, endowed by the late Patrick Geddes, Esq., at which twenty children receive free education. The building having become too small, the late Miss Davidson, of the Park, erected a very handsome school, at a cost of £1,500, and presented it to the trustees. There is also a public school within the burgh. The acreage of Culross parish is 7,584. The population of the burgh in 1871 amounted to 467, and the parish 1,354; in 1881 the former contained 400, and the latter 1,060.

KIRKMICHAEL,

WITH BALLINTUIM AND SPITAL OF GLENSHEE.

KIRKMICHAEL is an extensive parish, in the north-eastern corner of the county, adjoining Aberdeenshire on the north, and the county of Forfar on the east; it is seventeen miles in length, and from six to seven in breadth. The parish comprises the greater part of Strathardle, and is intersected by the river Arde, along the left bank of which an excellent road leads from Pitlochry to Blairgowrie. Ardley Grave, near Dirnanear, nine feet in length, has been reverently preserved, and handed down to posterity, favouring the supposition that this part of the country was inhabited by a race of Fingalians. From the Druidical remains in the parish, it is supposed that Strathardle was the residence of an archdruid; of these relics the principal are a rocking stone near Dalruizion, a supposed Druidical altar near Belgerran, and numerous circles and cairns. A military way from Coupar Angus to Fort George traverses the northern part of the parish, by the Spital of Glenshee. The southern part of the district is intersected by the Arde, which is crossed by a stone bridge of two arches. In the Strathardle portion of the parish stands the village and kirk, 72 miles N. from Edinburg, 29 N. from Perth, 13 E. from Pitlochry, and 14 N.W. from Blairgowrie. There are Established and Free churches, and a constabulary station in the village. The acreage of Kirkmichael parish is 57,283; and the population in 1871 was 965.

SPITAL OF GLENSHEE is a scattered district in the parish of Kirkmichael, fourteen miles north from the latter place, and the same distance east from Blairgowrie. There is an Established church here. At CRAY, in this district, is a handsome Free church and school.

BALLINTUIM is a small village in the parish of Kirkmichael. It is three miles east from Kirkmichael, and eleven miles north from Blairgowrie. The scenery around is very charming and interesting. There is a public school in the village.

MEIGLE AND ALYTH JUNCTION.

MEIGLE is a parish in the district of Strathmore—the village, or small town, an ancient one, and the seat of a presbytery, is 61 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. by E. from Perth, 13½ N.W. from Dundee, 9 S.S.W. from Kirriemuir, 7½ W. from Glamis, 6 E. from Coupar-Angus, and 4 S. from Alyth; pleasantly situated on the bank of the Isla, and about a mile from Alyth junction on the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway. A branch from Alyth Junction to Alyth also passes close to Meigle village, and has a station here. The parish is four miles and a half in length, and two in breadth, is fertile and well cultivated, and besides the Isla, is watered by the Dean, which is the northern boundary of the district. There are some beautiful seats in this part of the country, particularly Belmont Castle on the estate of that name, the property of the Earl of Wharmcliffe, the gardens and fine plantations of which render it the most delightful residence in all Strathmore. In one of the enclosures is pointed out a tumulus, where, it is said, the murderous Macbeth was deprived of his usurped power and his life in his fatal encounter with Macduff. A number of stones and monuments, supposed to be of Pictish origin, are also to be seen in the vicinity. A new parish church has been erected on the site of the old one (which was destroyed by fire in 1868), at a cost of about £2,500. It was opened for public worship in July, 1870. In the churchyard are some very old monuments, which tradition asserts to be the grave of Queen Vanoria, the unfaithful wife of King Arthur; the figures, which, it is said, once delineated the history of Vanoria, are so defaced and dilapidated as to render all attempts at deciphering their meaning a fruitless task. About a mile north-east of the village, at the junction of the Isla and the Dean, are the remains of a Roman camp, called Carden or Cuerden, and noticed by General Roy in his work on the Roman antiquities of Scotland. There is a good hotel, viz., the Kinloch Arms, which offers good accommodation to visitors, with fishing on the Dean and Isla free. A cattle market is held on the second Wednesday in every month, and fairs on the last Wednesday in June, and on the last Wednesday in October. Acreage of the parish 3,980; population 745, and in 1881, 969.

POST OFFICE, MEIGLE, Donald Mackenzie, Post Master.—Letters from the North, South and from all parts arrive at seven morning, and from Perth and the South at forty minutes past nine morning, and are despatched to Aberdeen and the North at eight morning and ten night, and to Perth and the South at twenty minutes past two afternoon, and fifty minutes past five evening.

METHVEN,

ALMOND BANK, GLENALMOND, TIBBERMUIR, AND ABERDALGIE.

METHVEN is a very neat village and parish, the former six miles west from Perth, situated on the high road to Crieff, from which it is distant eleven miles. It possesses a good subscription library. There is likewise an Agricultural Society, who hold two meetings annually. The Perth, Crieff and Methven Railway terminates here. The ancient church of Methven was collegiate, being founded in 1433, for a provost and seven prebendaries, by Walter Stuart, Earl of Athol, one of the youngest sons of Robert II. About a mile from the village is Methven Castle, the residence of William Smythe, Esq., distinguished in Scottish history as the place where King Robert was defeated by the English army, under the Earl of Pembroke, in 1306. But perhaps the most interesting object in the parish is the grave of the celebrated Bessie Bell and Mary Gray, whose beauty and seclusion from the world are the subject of an admired Scottish melody. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture, and at the linen and jute works of Messrs. R. & W. Moncrieff. Fairs are held on the Monday preceding Armulee market in May and the fourth Thursday in October. Acreage of the parish, 12,911; population in 1871, 2,115, and in 1881, 1847, the village numbering 751.

ALMOND BANK is a village in Methven parish, situated about four miles N.W. from Perth, and is a station on the Perth, Methven and Crieff line of railway. There is a public school in the village, which contains a population of about 500 persons.

Trinity College, GLENALMOND, on the banks of the Almond, is ten miles from Perth, and four miles from the Perth, Crieff and Methven Railway station. It was projected in the year 1811, and opened in the year 1847, and was founded for the double purpose of supplying a proper collegiate training to candidates for holy orders in the Scottish Episcopal Church and of establishing in Scotland a public school, after the general model of those in England. The site on which the college stands was presented by the late George Patten, Esq., of the Cairnies. The funds for the buildings were raised by general subscription throughout England and Scotland. Amongst the most munificent benefactors were the Duke of Buccleuch, the late Sir John Gladstone, Bart., the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and the Right Rev. Charles Wordsworth, the first warden of the college. The chapel, a building in the decorated style of Gothic architecture, 130 feet long by 52 wide, with a height of seventy feet, was erected at a cost of more than £8,000, at the sole expense of the Right Rev. C. Wordsworth. The council consists of sixteen members, namely, the seven Scotch bishops, with two presbyters, and seven laymen. The resident teachers are a warden, a sub warden, five other masters, and a medical officer; music is taught by the organist.

TIBBERMUIR (or Tibbermore) is a parish and a manufacturing district, having within it extensive bleach fields. The ancient castle of Huntingtower is in Tibbermuir, and is worthy of notice as being formerly the seat of the Gowrie family, and the place where James VI. was confined by the Earl of Gowrie and other conspirators in the year 1582. Tibbermuir has given its name to the first battle that was fought between the Marquis of Montrose and the Covenanters, though the conflict occurred more within the parish of Aberdalgie; in this sanguinary engagement the Covenanting forces were totally routed. Acreage, 6,140; population in 1871, 1,563.

TRINITY GASK is a parish in the lower part of Strathern, and comprises the ancient parishes of Kinloch and Wester Gask. It extends several miles along the northern bank of the Earn. The whole of the parish is arable, and well enclosed and planted. Acreage, 5,609; population in 1871, 415, and in 1881, 393.

ABERDALGIE, a parish, is washed on the south by the Earn, which here affords excellent fishing. The parish abounds in freestone, and much of the land is under plantation. Dupplin Castle, a seat of the Earl of Kinnoull, is in the parish. Acreage, 4,165; population in 1871, 342.

MUTHILL AND ARDOCH,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BRACO AND GREENLOANING.

MUTHILL is an extensive parish lying on the borders of the Highland district, on the right bank of the Earn. The village is 19 miles N. from Stirling, 16 W. from Perth, and 3 S. from Crieff; and is situate on the great military road from Dunblane to Inverness by Tummel Bridge. About a mile to the westward stands Drummond Castle, the ancient seat of the family of Perth, now the residence of Baroness Willoughby de Eresby; it is finely seated on a rock at the head of the vale of Strathearn, and attracts the attention and admiration of every stranger from the beautiful prospect it commands. There is a church, in ruins, said to have been built in 1419; the tower appears to be of an earlier date, and is doubtless of Pictish origin. A church was erected in 1823. In the churchyard there is a fine monument erected to the memory of the Rev. William Halley, the first Presbyterian minister of the parish; a Free church and an Episcopalian chapel are the other places of worship, and connected with the churches are schools and a joint library. The Crieff Junction Railway passes through the parish, and has a station here. A portion of the industrious classes are employed in weaving for the large manufacturing houses. The principal objects of interest in the parish, particularly to an antiquary, are two Roman camps, one at Strageth, and the other at Ardoch, a parish constituted in 1857, six miles from Muthill, the latter being considered one of the most perfect and interesting in Britain. The area of this camp is an oblong of one hundred and forty yards, by one hundred and twenty-five within the lines; the "general's quarter," which is a regular square of twenty yards each side, rises above the level of the camp, and contains the foundation of a house ten yards by seven. There are two other encampments adjoining, which have a communication with each other. Many years ago, various interesting relics were brought to light from beneath these ancient fortifications, such as Roman spears, helmets, fragments of bristles, and other articles; these lay at the house of Ardoch for a considerable period, but were all carried off by some soldiers in the Duke of Argyll's army after the battle of Sheriffmuir in 1715, and could never be recovered. Muthill parish embraces an area of 21,816 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 1,916, and in 1881, 1,701. Acreage of Ardoch parish, 21,127; population in 1871, 1,316.

BRACO is a village in the parish of Ardoch; it contains an Established and a Free church, and two public schools. Population in 1871, 343.

GREENLOANING is a small village, also in the parish of Ardoch about one mile distant from Braco; it is a station on the Scottish Central section of the Caledonian line, and contains an United Presbyterian church, and a Public school.

PERTH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KINFAUNS AND KINNOULL.

PERTH, an ancient city, a royal burgh, seat of a synod and presbytery, and capital of the county to which it gives its name, is 45 miles north from Edinburgh, 62 N.E. from Glasgow, 22 S.W. from Dundee, 15 S. from Dunkeld, and 16 S. from Blairgowrie. The city is situated at the opening of an extensive plain, nearly surrounded by picturesque hills, having in the distance a view of the sublime amphitheatre of the Grampians; and bounded on the north and south by two beautiful meadows, called the North and South Inches; the former containing one hundred acres, the latter seventy two; both ornamented with noble trees, and watered by the Tay, which occasionally overflows them. These Inches are devoted to the use and recreation of the inhabitants. The Tay is one of the finest rivers in the kingdom, and is celebrated for its picturesque scenery during its whole course, and for the value of its salmon fisheries. It is recorded that when Agricola's army saw this delightful plain and superb river, they exclaimed, as with one voice, Ecce Tiber! Ecce Campus Martius!—"Behold the Tiber! Behold the field of Mars!" Agricola pitched his tent in the middle of that field, on the spot where the city now stands. At one time the traces of a fortification, called Cromwell's Fort, were visible on the South Inch, but now handsome buildings have been erected on part of the space so occupied. Perth for a long period held the rank of capital of Scotland, was the residence of its kings and principal nobles, and the seat of its parliaments. It appears that it also bore the name of St. Johnstoun, from its ancient church dedicated to St. John. At the early period when Scots kings succeeded to the British throne, the church and bridge of Perth are supposed to have been consecrated to St. John the Baptist, as the tutelary saint, and consequently obtained the name of St. John's Town, but was not recognised by that name in any of the public documents of the period. Fordun, in his history, remarks that he had found in some ancient writings that the town of St. John, now called Perth, was, priorly Bertha, the contraction being Berth or Bert; and as the letters B and P are used in the Gaelic language indiscriminately, it may naturally be presumed that the Highlanders changed the pronunciation of it to Perth; and from this circumstance, it is very probable, the present name of the place was derived; indeed, at the present time, the word Perth is pronounced by the Highlanders Piert or Peart. The approach to Perth by the Edinburgh road is very picturesque, and the descent to the South Inch terminates in a fine avenue of trees, extending to the town. At the southern extremity of this avenue stands the general prison for Scotland, built by Government in 1812, for the reception of prisoners of war. It was wholly re-built and remodelled in 1832; now it is occupied as a convict prison, and more extensive buildings erected for the purpose. The city itself is large and well built; the principal streets are long, well paved, and gas lighted. At the east end of Marshall place, and forming the extreme south-eastern angle of the city, stands a fine architectural ornament, the water reservoir, designed by Dr. Anderson, formerly rector of the academy, and erected under his immediate superintendence; he also devised the scheme for the supply of pure water. In all wells sunk within or near the town the water was strongly impregnated with salts, and consequently ill adapted for culinary purposes or cleanliness; the saline fluid flowing in much faster from the neighbouring high grounds than the soft water from the river. To obviate this, Dr. Anderson devised the plan of excavating a filtering bed, 300 feet long, in the gravel, in the upper end of Fenton Island, which having a branch of the river flowing on either side, secures only the water of the Tay, and produces an unlimited quantity of this indispensable element, pure, soft, and limpid at all times and seasons. This is conveyed to the reservoir by means of a suction pipe of great power, below the bed of the principal branch of the river, and thrown up into the tank by two steam engines, each of ten horse power. The project has been so successful that works upon the same principle have been carried into effect in Berlin and Paris. The expense of this work is defrayed by an assessment or water rate on real rents above a certain amount. From the increase of inhabitants, the extension of the royalty, and numerous villas having been erected in the vicinity, a new Water Act has received the sanction of Parliament and is now in full operation. By this Act the present system has been extended to all parts of the city and suburbs, affording to the community an unlimited supply of pure water. At the public baths every description of bath may be used at a very low charge. Opposite the North Inch, and fronting the Tay, is an elegant row of houses called Rose terraces; in the centre are erected the Public Seminaries (noticed hereafter). At the south end of Rose terrace is a handsome range of houses called Athole crescent. The range of villas on St. Leonard's bank, skirting the western boundary of the South Inch, at the summit of a gentle elevation, is very pleasing. In addition to these, the whole of the tasteful erections in King street and King's place, Kinnoull street, Athole street, Charlotte place, and Barossa place, have arisen within forty years. Adjoining the North Inch is a bridge which crosses the Tay; this fine structure, elegant though unadorned, is built in a most substantial manner. Its original narrowness admitted of a footpath on one side only, but in 1871 it was widened at a cost of over £2,000, by the addition of cast-iron footways, with Caithness pavement and balustrades. This bridge is reckoned one of Smeaton's most successful works. More recently many old buildings on the west bank of the river have been demolished, and a new street called Tay street has been formed, extending from the bridge southward to the Dundee railway bridge. Many handsome buildings have already been erected in this street, including a new savings bank, Free church, an elegant building, with an handsome spire: the Victoria buildings, built by Mr. Cowan, publisher, which include offices, where the Government officials are located, and others. Immediately adjoining the bridge is the suburb of Bridge end, leading to Kinnoull Hill, whose summit at the distance of a mile and a half, can be most agreeably ascended by various pleasant walks. The height of the precipice of Kinnoull Hill is above six hundred feet perpendicular, and affords an enchanting prospect. The noble river that flows along the base of this towering cliff, the hills and more concentrated objects in the foreground, and the grandeur of the mountainous perspective, present a panorama rarely excelled. Near the eastern declivity of this remarkable cliff stands the beautiful castle of Kinfauns, in the centre of the delightful demesne of the same name, so richly embellished by the late Lord Gray. On the eastern bank of the river, about two miles above Perth, stands Seone Palace. The original edifice, of historical notoriety, has been replaced by a modern pile of buildings; they are surrounded by extensive pleasure grounds, highly embellished by wood and water. At a short distance from the palace is the chapel, also rebuilt; it is environed by majestic trees, which give an air of pleasing solemnity. Before the reign of King James, the coronation of the kings of Scotland was solemnised in the palace of Seone. The Earl of Mansfield is hereditary keeper of this palace, and proprietor of the estate.

The public buildings in Perth, especially those of late erection, display much taste and spirit. The most prominent are the County Buildings. This structure, completed after a design by Mr. Smart, is situated in Tay street, on the banks of the Tay, the front of which is embellished by an elegant portico in the centre, and twelve massive fluted columns, which support a beautiful pediment. From the entrance hall a passage leads off to the county hall, which is a fine room, 68 feet by 40, and occupies the south wing; the centre contains a commodious justiciary hall of semi-circular form, with a spacious gallery. The remainder of the building, on the same floor, includes the sheriff's court and room, sheriff clerk's office, and an arched fire-proof room where the records of the town are deposited; above is a spacious ball and card room, &c. This building having been found to afford insufficient accommodation, an addition was erected in 1866, on the side of South street. Directly in the rear of these buildings is situated the gaol, divided into two prisons; the northern side for criminals, and the other side for debtors. From the gaoler's house, fronting the interior of the entrance gate, a subterraneous passage leads to the prisoners' bar in the justice hall. The new Public Hall, the property of a limited liability company, and opened in the spring of 1881 at a cost of £8,000, is capable of seating from 1,200 to 1,400 people and contains every convenience; the platform is arranged and fitted up with scenery suitable for dramatic and operatic purposes. The Perth Boys' and Girls' Religious Society Hall, erected in 1881, at a cost of about £2,300, will accommodate 600 to 700 children, and contains, besides the hall, directors' room, two large class rooms, lady workers' room, and other conveniences. The Perthshire Natural History Museum has exclusive of the museum hall, a large lecture room, library and laboratory. These buildings, forming one construction, between 200 and 300 feet in length, are built in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, from the designs of John Young, Esq. architect, of Perth. The new Municipal Buildings, erected in 1881, at a cost of £13,000, are situated at the east end of High street, and have a neat and handsome appearance; they are in the Tudor style of architecture from the design of Mr. Helton, of Perth, are a great addition to the public buildings of the city, and having a frontage to the river form, in conjunction with the above, an ornament to this locality. They contain the offices of the city clerk, chamberlain, registrar, assessor, police superintendent, treasurer to the police commissioners and gas offices. The burgh court room, which has its principal entrance from Tay street, is on the first floor above the police office and communicating therewith. The council chamber, or commissioners' hall, is considered the most perfect of its kind in Scotland, and occupies the principal portion of the building and is entered from High street; it is lighted by large mullioned and transomed windows which have been gratuitously filled with stained glass by the present (1882) Lord Provost and several of his predecessors in office, and are illustrative of personages in Sir Walter Scott's novel "The Fair Maid of Perth." A panelled dado, 6 feet high, is carried round the room. The City Hall, at the west end of Saint John's church, erected by the town, is one of the most spacious public rooms in the provinces, seating 1,500 persons. It is open for public meetings on the payment of moderate fees on application to the City Chamberlain.

Perth has long been noted for its dyeworks and for its manufacture in inks, but of late it has also become famous for its manufacture of gauge glasses, which it sends to all parts of the world. This business is carried on extensively by the firms of Messrs. Moncrieff and Toney and Sons. There are also extensive linen and jute manufactories, and various fabrics of cotton hosiery, &c. a brewing, tanning, iron founding, rope and sail making, and other branches of industry and skill, whilst the coal, corn and timber trades employ in the aggregate a considerable capital. The city possesses extensive railway communication by means of the Caledonian, North British and the Highland Railways. There are eight banking establishments settled in Perth, exclusive of one for savings. The hotels are of a highly respectable character. The Royal George Hotel, in George street; the Salutatio, in South street; Pople's Royal British, and the Queen's (opposite the railway terminus) are comfortable and well conducted establishments. Vessels of 200 tons burthen, owing to skillful dredging, can deliver and receive cargoes at the harbour; and a steam boat passes frequently between Perth and Dundee. The number of vessels belonging to the port for the year ending December, 1871, was 45, with an aggregate of 4,857 tons. The customs revenue of the port for the year ending March, 1868, including British spirits, was £15,965 15s. 1d. for the year ending March, 1881, it was £33,890, and for the year ending March, 1882, £35,592. The exports are chiefly potatoes and timber, and the imports (coastwise and foreign) are coals, manures and timber.

The government of the city is vested in a lord provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors. The council thus consists of twenty six members, all of whom, with the exception of the dean of guild, are, since the passing of the last Reform Bill, elected by household suffrage. The elective constituency is divided into four wards. The dean of guild is a member of council ex-officio, and is chosen by the Guildry Incorporation; the lord provost and magistrates are elected by the councillors, from amongst themselves. The council meets on the first Monday in every month; a sheriff court is held every Tuesday and Friday during session, and two courts at least in each vacation. The police of the city are under the charge of a superintendent, and the quiet and good order of the town is materially promoted by the power the magistrates have of summary punishment for petty offences. The police, lighting, cleansing, paving, &c. of the town, are under the charge of the Town Council Commissioners, under the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862. Perth was constituted a royal burgh, with a confirmation of all its former privileges, in the year 1210, by William the Lion. James VI. accepted the municipal office of provost of the city, and partook at the Cross of the festivities which were prepared for that extraordinary occasion. The city returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, Mr. C. S. Parker being the present representative.

The churches in Perth, with some few exceptions, do not display any striking external beauties. St. John's church is a very ancient structure, and supposed to be one of the first churches built of stone in this country; it was originally erected in the form of a cross, and called the Kirk of the Holy Cross of Saint Johnstoun. Although it has been almost entirely remodelled by alterations at different periods, yet enough of the ancient part remains to testify that it was once a very fine edifice. Some extensive repairs have greatly improved its exterior appearance in later times, and whilst in former times the interior was in one it is now divided to accommodate three congregations—the East, West and Middle. On the outside of the tower are affixed a set of musical bells, covered by a kind of portico, and a singularly looking spire surmounts the whole. The great reformer Knox thundered forth his declamations from the venerable old pile. At the extremity of High street, in Methven street, stands St. Paul's church, a more modern and not indecent structure of stone, with a substantial steeple. St. Leonard's church, a modest structure, erected in King street in 1835—the expense being defrayed by joint-stock shares and private subscriptions—is incorporated with the Establishment. St. John's Episcopal church, Princes street, stands on the site of a former chapel; it was originally the only Episcopal church in Perth. It is a handsome edifice in the early English style, and the interior is very elegantly finished; it is seated for about 500. There is also an Episcopal school church near the station, in connection with St. John's, which is used on week days as a day school. St. Ninian's cathedral in Athole street (also Episcopal) was built in 1850. It is in the Scotch middle-pointed style of architecture, only a part of the proposed building is erected, but when completed it will have two towers and be an ornament to the city. The Free Church have numerous edifices, as have also the different bodies of Presbyterian dissenters; and there is also a Gaelic church. The Baptists have a commodious chapel in South street, and the Roman Catholics one in Melville street. St. Mary's, Kinnoull Hill, is a Roman Catholic establishment, consisting of the church and residence of the Redemptorist Fathers. The house serves also for the accommodation of clergy and laity who come here to spend a short time in spiritual exercises. The building though simple in its details forms by its size and proportions a handsome and imposing edifice. It is in the early English style, and is a very perfect specimen of the simple and graceful architecture of the twelfth century. The house and church were built from the designs of Mr. Helton, city architect.

NEWSPAPERS.—There are three newspapers published in Perth, viz.—The Perthshire Advertiser, published three times a week (Liberal), which has a large and influential circulation in Perthshire and the Midland counties, was established in 1833. The Perthshire Constitutional and Journal (Conservative) was established in 1832, and circulates among the nobility, gentry, &c. The Perthshire Courier, established 1800, is Liberal in politics, and the organ of the Free church party; it devotes much space to ecclesiastical matters.

The city of Perth contains several charitable and well supported institutions for the sick and destitute. Among these are the County and City Infirmary (attached to which is a District and Dispensary department), a Hospital for Incurables, Murray's Royal Institution (an asylum for the insane), King James the Sixth's Hospital, a Society for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, the Destitute Sick Society, &c. The Infirmary is a commanding structure, the first stone of which was laid by the late Lord Kinnaird in 1836. The late Marquis of Breadalbane and Dr. Brown, of Perth, left liberal bequests to this institution. Additional wards for the treatment of infectious diseases were erected in 1865, at a cost of £1,200, defrayed principally by subscription. King James the Sixth's Hospital was founded by King James the Sixth in 1560, and charters were granted by that monarch in 1569 and 1587, and confirmed by Acts of Parliament in 1537 and 1592, "to provide by all honest ways and means an hospital for the poor maimed distressed persons, orphans and fatherless bairns within our burgh of Perth," and for the endowment of which he gave all the "lands, biddings, tenements, kirks, orchards, &c., which pertained to the chaplains, aldermen, prebendaries, founded in whatever kirk, chapel or college within the liberties and privileges of said burgh of Perth; all the lands, &c., &c., which pertained to the Blackfriars, Greyfriars and Carmelite monks at the Reformation—the profits of the same to be applied, in all time coming, to the hospital and sustenance of the poor." In 1812 the managers found they were getting into debt, and instead of keeping inmates inside the building, they now give them an equivalent of £5 and £12 a year as outdoor pensioners. At the present time the building is chiefly converted into dwelling houses for the working classes. The Hospital for Incurables is situated on the Dundee road, and usually contains from six to twelve patients. There are many applicants, and the Directors hope to make arrangements to receive ten or twelve more. Murray's Royal Institution, erected from a bequest of Mr. James Murray, a native of Perth, was opened in 1837, for the reception of 80 patients. It is situated on an eminence of considerable elevation on the north-west side of the Hill of Kinnoull, and is in the Grecian-Doric style of architecture. The Poorhouse, an extensive pile of buildings, is situated on the Glasgow road, and was erected by the Perth Parochial Board, at a cost of £8,000. The Antiquarian Museum possesses a considerable collection of valuable coins, medals and manuscripts, besides a great variety of natural curiosities, amongst which is a cabinet of minerals, containing upwards of twelve hundred choice specimens. In the centre of Rose terrace were erected, in 1835, the Public Seminaries, of fine stone, embellished with noble pillars. Since the passing of the Scotch Education Act, 1872, the School Board has remodelled the interior of the buildings and added accessories suitable to modern ideas. It has also instituted a curriculum extending over a period of three years, beginning with session 1881-2. The school is separated into two divisions—the lower or elementary school, and the higher or secondary school; the latter having for its object what is commonly called middle class education, as given in the best higher public schools. The session commences in September and ends at 30th June. The masters comprehend a rector for classics, a mathematical master, an English master, master of modern languages, writing master, drawing master, lady superintendent, who is infant teacher, with their assistants. Sharp's Educational Institute is in South Methven street. This large and elegant building, erected by the trustees of the late Mr. John Sharp, baker, Perth, was opened in September, 1860. The institution contains four departments—the industrial, the infants', the junior, and the senior. Special attention is given to the industrial training of girls in sewing, knitting, household economy, &c. The elder boys are taught callisthenics and drill. A beautiful structure has been erected near the bridge, which forms a handsome termination to George street. It is dedicated to the memory of the late Thomas Marshall, Esq. of Glenalmond, formerly lord provost. The form of this chapel is circular, ornamented with an elegant Ionic portico; the body of the building is surmounted by a dome, and the whole is imitative of the Pantheon at Rome. In the interior are halls for the public library and the museum of the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth. This structure was raised by private subscription. The Freemasons' Hall is a neat building, in the Parliament close, High street, and contains a spacious room. It was built on the site of the old Parliament House, in the year 1818, and is the property of the Royal Arch Lodge of Freemasons. A statue of the late Prince Consort was erected in 1864, and was inaugurated by Her Majesty on the 30th of August in that year. On this occasion the late Sir David Ross, the then lord provost, was knighted. The statue is the work of Mr. Brodie, sculptor, Edinburgh, and is much admired. On the Inches many of the citizens ardently engage in athletic sports and exercises, especially cricket, football, and the national game of golf. The Royal Perth Golfing Society includes in its roll of members a great many of the nobility and gentry. The barracks, erected in 1795, at the west end of Athols street, were originally intended to accommodate 200 cavalry, but are now devoted to the use of infantry.

The weekly market day is Friday. The fairs, since the year 1822, have been altered by the magistrates and town council, on account of the general inconvenience resulting from the days formerly appointed falling on the same days, or at the same time, with the fairs of Falkirk and other places, they are now, therefore, held on the first Fridays in March, April, July, and September, on the third Friday in October, the second Friday in December, and a sheep and wool fair the first Tuesday after Inverness wool fair, and a horse market takes place on the first Friday in May; there are now two great cattle and sheep marts in Perth, two taking place on Mondays, and two on Fridays. The population of Perth in 1871 was 25,606, and in 1881, 28,948.

KINFAUNS is a parish two miles east of Perth, and is about five miles long, by a width of two and a half miles. It is situated on the banks of the river Tay, and is a station on the Perth and Dundee line. An Established and a Free church, and a Board school are in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 4,291; population, 578.

GLENCARSE is a small village in the parish of Kinfauns, 6½ miles E. by S. from Perth. It is a station on the Perth and Dundee section of the Caledonian Railway. The Episcopal church of All Saints' is a neat building, in the domestic Gothic style of architecture, erected at the cost of £1,500. It is in the diocese of Brechin.

KINNOULL parish lies with its western extremity to the Tay, opposite Perth, extending thence in an irregular manner for nearly four miles, with a general breadth of one mile. The parish consists of several detached portions, including Balbeggie, Murray-shall, Balthayock, and Inchyra. The surface is hilly, but romantic and exceedingly beautiful, being covered to a great extent with fine plantations. From the summit of Kinnoull hill a beautiful view of the surrounding country may be obtained. Many handsome villas have been erected within the last few years on the rising grounds to the east of the river, and forming part of the suburb of Kinnoull. The ancient church of the parish was a rectory, in the proprietary of the monastery of Cambuskenneth, and was dedicated to St. Constantine. The modern church is a neat edifice, built on a bank overhanging the Tay. Near this once stood the old castle of Kinnoull. Kinnoull has given the title of earl to a branch of the family of Hay of Errol, the first of the title being ennobled in 1627, as Lord Hay of Kinfauns, and elevated to the earldom in 1633 as Earl of Kinnoull and Viscount Dupplin. A handsome school has recently been erected under the combined Boards of Perth and Kinnoull. The parish comprises 8,646 acres, and in 1871 the population numbered 8,108.

PITLOCHRY,

MOULIN, LOGIERAIT, BALLINLUIG AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PITLOCHRY is a thriving village and post town, in the parish of Moulin, 13 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, and about five from Logierait; situated on the banks of the Tummel, and surrounded on all sides by some of the most beautiful and varied scenery found in the highlands of Perthshire. The trade of the village is mainly confined to that of domestic and retail character—except that the distillation of whisky is carried on somewhat extensively in the village and neighbourhood. The place, too, is of sufficient importance to encourage the establishment of several respectable fire and life agency offices, and three banking concerns—branches, respectively, of the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and there is, besides, a branch of the Perth Savings Bank, and a station on the Highland Railway. There are two small manufactories in the village, one for tweeds, plaids, &c. and the other for the preparation of chemicals. There are two hotels, viz., Fisher's and Scotland's Commercial. There is a very handsome edifice in connection with the Free church, and for the convenience of the great influx of the English visitors there is a small but beautiful chapel about half a mile to the east of the village called Holy Trinity Episcopal chapel. There is a Hydropathic Establishment, the finest in Scotland, situate to the east of the town, the cost of erection being over £60,000. A justice of peace court sits here once in every third month, and the fairs are held annually, on the Saturday before Amlure in May; on the Friday after Falkirk tryst in August (for lambs), and on the third Wednesday in October (old style). Population in 1871, 510, and in 1881, 776.

MOULIN is a large parish in the Highlands, extending towards Athole, bounded on the north-east by the parish of Kirkmichael, on the south-east by Logierait, on the south west by Dull, and on the west and north-west by Blair Athole. It is intersected by the Briarochan and the Arnate, which unite within the district. The latter takes its rise in Lochloch, in the north-east of the parish, and runs through Glenfarnate, and its junction with the Briarochan forms the Ardale. The several lochs are well stocked with trout, particularly Loch Broom. The greater part of the parish is mountainous, but the vales of the streams are exceedingly beautiful. The village, which is very small, is five miles distant from Logierait; near to it stand the ruins of the old castle of Moulin. There is a very excellent inn in the village. The parish church, which was erected in 1832, and the parish school are both situated in this village. In the parish is the pass of KILLICRANKIE, noted for the battle fought there in July, 1639, between King William's troops, commanded by General Mackay, and a body of Highlanders under the Viscount of Dundee. There is a fair held at Moulin annually on the first Tuesday in March. The parish of Moulin has an acreage of 44,640. The population according to the returns for 1871, was 1,793, and in 1881, 1,835.

LOGIERAIT is a parish in the northern part of the county, the village being 8 miles north from Dunkeld, and the like distance east from Aberfeldy. It is noted for the distillation of whisky. The principal part of the parish lies on the point of land formed by the junction of the Tay and the Tummel, extending along the banks of each seven miles. Not far from the church is an eminence, which commands a prospect of the greater part of the parish, which, including the windings of the rivers, the vales and pastures, with the woodlands, in some places extending to the rivers' banks, and the distant mountains, form one of the richest landscapes that can be imagined. On an eminence above the junction, a Celtic cross commands the valley. This is a monument erected to the memory of the late Duke of Athole, by the gentlemen of the county and his tenantry. A Combination Poorhouse was erected in 1864, for the accommodation of Logierait and ten adjoining parishes. A chain boat commenced crossing the Tay at Logierait in August, 1824, for the accommodation of foot and horse passengers. A coach and four may go into the conveyance without taking the horses from the carriage. It was at Logierait that Prince Charles kept his prisoners after the battle of Prestonpans. Acreage of the parish, 37,759; population in 1871, 2,417, and in 1881, 2453.

BALLINLUIG is a small village in the parish of Logierait, situated about half-way between Dunkeld and Pitlochry. Here is a Baptist chapel, an excellent school, and there is a station on the Highland Railway, which is also the junction for Aberfeldy.

SCONE,

BALBEGGIE, CAIRNBEDDIE, COLLACE, GILDTOWN, KINROSSIE AND ST. MARTIN.

SCONE is a parish lying on the left bank of the Tay, opposite the parishes of Redgorton & Perth—the village, sometimes called New SCONE, is about two miles north east from Perth, and with the palace occupies a retiring part of the grounds which rise from the Tay, and commands an outlook upon the river and the vale of Perth. This place is worthy of notice principally on account of its ancient palace, for ages the residence of the early Scottish monarchs, the place of their coronation, and the scene of many important and brilliant events. In the vicinity formerly stood an abbey, founded by Alexander I. in the year 1114. Some historians have described Scone as the ancient capital of the Picts; it certainly was the chief seat of Scottish royalty as far back as the time of Kenneth II. In the church of the abbey was preserved the famous stone (brought from Ireland, according to some writers, by Fergus I.), which was used as the coronation seat, and upon which all the Scottish kings were crowned till the calamitous days of John Balliol, when Edward I. carried it to England, where it continues to form one of the appendages to a regality in Westminster Abbey. The last monarch crowned at Scone was Charles II. January 1st, 1651, when on his expedition in this kingdom. On the site of the ancient palace an elegant new edifice has been raised, as a seat of the Earl of Mansfield—pleasantly seated on an extensive lawn sloping gently to the Tay, and surrounded by large and umbrageous plantations. In this modern mansion much of the antique furniture has, with judicious taste, been preserved, in particular, a bed that belonged to James VI. and another, the hangings of which were wrought by the fair hands of Queen Mary, when a prisoner at Lochleven; the music gallery occupies the same site as the noble hall in which the coronations were performed; the large gallery for the reception of a collection of valuable paintings is one hundred and eighty feet long. About fifty yards from the house is an aisle of the old abbey of Scone; it contains a magnificent marble monument to a Viscount Stormont, who died upwards of two centuries ago. At a little distance further stands the old market cross of Scone, surrounded by a wilderness of pleasure grounds, which have usurped the station of the ancient village; it has been aptly observed, that "there are many instances of towns losing their market crosses but this is the only cross which has lost its town." Acreage of the parish, 7,815; population in 1871, 2,320.

BALBEGGIE is a village in the parish of Kinnoull, three miles north-east from Scone, and five miles north-east from Perth. It contains a United Presbyterian church.

COLLACE is a parish seven miles north-east from Perth, surrounded by the parishes of Cargill, St. Martin, Kinnaird and Abernethy. The hill of Dunsinane, 1,114 feet above the sea level is in this parish. Upon this insulated and chosen site (rendered famous by Shakspeare), Macbeth, the Thane of Glamis, in 1043, erected a strong and lofty castle, keeping the surrounding country in the most abject subjection. In 1094, an overwhelming force, supported by Edward the Confessor, the reigning King of England, marched upon the stronghold on behalf of Malcolm, son of King Duncan, whom Macbeth had previously murdered. Being observed from the battlements, Macbeth fled northwards, but was pursued and slain, according to tradition, at Linlithgow, in Aberdeenshire. The fortress was razed to the ground. *The parish church is a neat Gothic structure, with square tower, erected in 1813. Freestone of good quality abounds in the parish. KINROSSIE is a small village in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 2,927. Population in 1871, 456, and in 1881, 409.

ST. MARTIN is a parish about five miles north-east from Perth, extending along the banks of the Tay, forming an oblong square, averaging nearly two miles in breadth. The soil in general is black, and seems originally to have been taken from moorland. At CAIRNBEDDIE are the remains of a castle once occupied by Macbeth, and as tradition states, this place not being secure, he removed to the celebrated hill of Dunsinane, where he fortified a castle. About a mile from his old residence, at a place still called "The Witch Stone" (where a remarkable stone still stands), is pointed out the spot where he was met by the witches who warned him to beware "till Birnam forest came to Dunsinane," &c. There is a parish church. GULDSTOWN is a small village in the parish of St. Martin. Acreage of the parish, 6,565. Population in 1871, 735, and in 1881, 741.

STANLEY,

AUCHTERGAVEN, BANKFOOT, KINCLAVEN, PITCAIRN GREEN, LUNCARTY, REDGORTON AND MONEYDIE.

STANLEY, a quoad sacra parish, partly in the parish of Auchtergaven and partly in that of Redgorton, is pleasantly situated on the Tay, about 7 miles N. from Perth. It is a station on the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway, and is the junction for the Highland railway to Dunkeld, &c. There is a cotton spinning establishment in the village; also a Free church, a church of the Establishment, and a Board school. Population about 1,000.

BANKFOOT is a village in the parish of Auchtergaven, about 9 miles from Perth and 6 from Dunkeld, situated on the road from Perth to Dunkeld. The district, which is hilly and highly cultivated, lies on the south-west bank of the Tay, and on the south-east side of Birnam Hill. The manor and ancient parish of LOGIEBRIDGE is now a component part of this parish. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel are in the village, also a Board school. There are also extensive linen works. The acreage of the parish is 12,941, and the population, 2,141.

KINCLAVEN is a parish about 8 miles from Stanley, bounded on the north and east by the river Tay, on the south by Auchtergaven, and on the west by Auchtergaven and Little Dunkeld. The places of worship are the parish church and an United Presbyterian church, and there is a Board school.

MONEYDIE parish is bounded on the north and north-east by Auchtergaven, and on the south and south east by Redgorton, and is situated about five miles from Perth. There is a church of the Establishment and a Board school in the parish. Acreage, 2,433.

PITCAIRN GREEN is a village in the parish of Redgorton, situated on the north bank of the Almond, about 4½ miles from Perth. At Pitcairnfield and Cromwell Park are extensive bleach works. There is a Free church and a Board school in the village, and an United Presbyterian church at Bridgton.

REDGORTON parish is situated on the west bank of the Tay and the north side of the Almond, about 4 miles from Perth. At LUNCARTY is an extensive bleachfield and a station on the Caledonian Railway, and at Redgorton is an Established church and a Board school. Acreage of the parish, 6,077.

THORNHILL,

OR THORNHILL-IN-MENTEITH, is a village in the parish of Kincardine, 45 miles w. by N. from Edinburgh, 39 s.w. from Perth, 5 s. from Callander, 4 from Doune, and 4 from Kippen. It consists chiefly of one street, extending nearly half a mile in length. The inhabitants are employed mostly in agriculture, and a few in weaving. Two churches of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship; and there are several schools. The parish lies in the southern quarter of the county, in the strath of Menteith; it is triangular in figure, one side of which is twelve miles in length, another sixteen, and a third about seven. A large portion of the parish was formerly covered with moss, but, with the exception of about five hundred acres, it is now entirely free. Adjacent to the Teith, and on the road from Stirling to Doune, is the highly ornamented and improved estate of Blair Drummond, upon which operations of great magnitude have been successfully carried on in reducing the quantity of superincumbent moss, from which the estate is now said to be entirely free. Population in 1871, 513, and in 1881, 540.

RENFREWSHIRE.

THIS county, of great importance as connected with the manufactures of North Britain, is bounded on the south by Ayrshire, and on the east and north-east by Lanarkshire; the Clyde river and Firth separate it from the county of Dumbarton on the north, and the Firth of Clyde divides it from Argyleshire on the west. In figure it is nearly triangular, measuring from north-west to south-east about thirty miles, and varying in breadth from ten to fifteen miles. It embraces an area of 162,428 statute acres, or 254 square miles.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion, this district was inhabited by the Damnii, a British tribe who also occupied the adjacent vale of Strathclyde. The invaders concentrated themselves at a spot near the present site of Paisley, to which they gave the name of Vandunaria. In after times the Romanised inhabitants were subjected to the sway of the Scots, and in 1097 submitted to the silent revolution which took place under Edgar, when the Celtic customs were changed for the municipal laws which the Sæto-Saxon government gradually introduced. In the reign of David I. Walter, the son of Alan, fled from Shropshire during the troublous conflicts of Maud and Stephen, and settled in the district, where David I. made him steward and gave him lands to support the dignity of his office. Besides these possessions he subsequently acquired the whole district of Strathgryfe, and the western half of Kyle, in Ayrshire, which hence was called Kyle Stewart. Such was the manner in which the first of the royal family of Stewart settled in Scotland. At this period the country in this quarter was in a semi-barbarous state, but Walter the Stewart, introduced new and civilized usages. He settled many of his military followers on his lands, and by founding the abbey of Paisley, introduced a body of instructed men, who taught the ancient people domestic arts and foreign manners. For several centuries this district formed a portion of Lanarkshire. In 1404 Robert III. created a principality, consisting of the barony of Renfrew and the whole of the Stewart's estates, with the earldom of Carrick and the barony of King's Kyle, all of which he granted, in a free regality, as a provision for his son James; and this principality continued, in after times, the appropriate appanage of the eldest sons of the Scottish monarchs. In consequence of these arrangements, the identity of the barony of Renfrew and the shire of Lanark was dissolved, and the former placed under the jurisdiction of a separate sheriff.

SOIL, PRODUCE, AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is very much diversified. In those parts of the high grounds which are not covered by heath and moss, a fine light soil on a gravelly sub-stratum is generally found. In the portion formed of detached hills the service is a thin earth, based on gravel; and in the level districts the plough or spade sinks through a deep, rich brown loam. More than one-half of the shire, comprehending the west and south-east portions, is hilly, and devoted to pasture. The cultivated districts comprise the north, the north-east, and the centre of the county, and consist partly of low district elevations, and partly of a level tract of rich loam between Paisley and the river Clyde. The hilly part of the country varies in elevation from 500 to 600 feet; the hill of greatest altitude in the shire is about 1,240 feet high. Owing to the great demand in this county for dairy produce, and that also of the garden and the fold (arising from the vicinity of large and populous towns), nearly two-thirds of the arable land in the shire is kept under grass; and hence the county of Renfrew enjoys but little celebrity as an agricultural district. The minerals of this shire are of very considerable value—coal, limestone, and sandstone abounding in various parts of it. The most extensive coal works are those of Quarrelton, near the centre of the county; Polmadie, on its north-east boundary, and Hurlet and Househill, to the south-east of Paisley. As many as eight or nine different lime quarries have been wrought at the same time in Renfrewshire. Ironstone accompanies all the coal strata, and is particularly embodied in the composition of the shores of the Clyde. In point of commercial and manufacturing importance, this county is second only to that of Lanark, and with it unites in constituting the great manufacturing districts of Scotland. The goods produced are chiefly of cotton and silk, including amongst various articles and fabrics, shawls of infinite diversity in texture and price. Whilst Paisley is the head quarters of the trade in these articles, the business of weaving is pursued, to a greater or less extent, in almost every town, village, and hamlet. Another important branch is the manufacture of sewing cotton, which is carried on very extensively at Paisley. The free export of the manufactured goods is promoted by the different sea-ports on the Clyde, especially Greenock, by which also foreign produce is imported. The trade is further assisted by the Forth and Clyde Canal, which connects this county with many other shires.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of Renfrewshire are of no great magnitude in themselves, but by the industry and enterprise of the inhabitants of the district they are rendered of material importance to society. The principal streams are the White Cart, the Black Cart, and the Gryfe, all of which ultimately unite and fall into the Clyde below Inchinnan Bridge; that is, about half-way down the river between Glasgow and Port Glasgow. The White Cart (which, by way of distinction, is generally denominated The Cart), has its creative springs at Eaglesham, in this county, and in the high grounds of East Kilbride, in Lanarkshire; and, passing Paisley in its course, joins the Gryfe at the bridge above named. The Black Cart issues from the beautiful loch of Castle Semple, in Lochwinnoch parish, and flowing northward, falls in with the Gryfe at Walkinshaw. The Gryfe rises in the high rounds above Largs, and flows eastwards until it meets the Black Cart; the Gryfe bestows the name of Strathgryfe upon the vale through which it flows. The lakes are Castle Semple Loch, Queenside Loch (in the parish of Lochwinnoch), two lochs in Neilston parish, and several smaller ones. The first named (Castle Semple) is situate in the southern border of the county; its banks are beautifully wooded in some places, and it contains a small island, on which stand the ruins of a castle. This county enjoys the benefit of railway transit, being intersected by the main lines of the Caledonian and the Glasgow and South-Western Railways with their branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Renfrewshire comprehends fifteen entire parishes and four parts of parishes. It contains two representative burghs—Port Glasgow and Renfrew—which join with Rutherglen, Dumbarton, and Kilmarnock in returning one member to Parliament; and Greenock, Paisley, and the county each send a representative. The present member for the county is Alex. Crum, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1881-82, numbered 6523. The lord lieutenant is Sir M. R. Shaw Stewart, Bart. According to the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 216,947; namely, 103,669 males and 113,278 females. In 1881 the figures given were:—males, 126,341, females, 136,640; total, 262,981, shewing an increase over the previous return of 46,034. The number of inhabited houses in the shire at the last-named date was 50,307; uninhabited, 4,460; building, 356.

BARRHEAD,

NEILSTON, HURLET AND NEIGHBOURHOODS

BARRHEAD is a thriving village in the parish of Neilston, county of Renfrew, four miles from Paisley and seven from Glasgow. The town or village consists chiefly of one principal street, with several smaller ones diverging from it, and together with the suburbs of GRAHAMSTON and DUNTERLIE, is the centre of a manufacturing and thickly populated neighbourhood. The trade and manufactures of the district are very considerable, consisting of several large bleach fields, a number of extensive calico and shawl printing establishments, cotton spinning, power-loom weaving, besides collieries, and engineering and ironfoundry works. These altogether give employment to a vast number of both sexes, and contribute materially to the prosperity of the place. In the village there are two banking establishments, several respectable shops and a gas works. A justice of the peace court is held on the first Monday in each month. The railway station, a handsome one, is situated close to the town. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, an Evangelical Union chapel, and one for Roman Catholics. There are two schools built under the Scotch Education Act, each affording accommodation for about 350 children. There is also a Mechanics' Institute, with an extensive library attached. Population of Barrhead in 1871, 6,503, and in 1881, 6,727.

NEILSTON is a village in the parish of its name, nine miles s.w.

from Glasgow, the like distance n.e. from Stewarton, five from Paisley, and two from Barrhead, eligibly situate on the river Levern on the road to Irvine, in the midst of a well-cultivated and thriving neighbourhood. In the centre of the village stands the parochial church, surmounted by a handsome steeple and clock. The situation of the village is healthy, and is within ten minutes' walk of the station. In the vicinity are several bleach fields and printworks, and a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. There is a school under the Elementary Education Act, and an endowed school. The inhabitants also support several institutions and societies of a charitable, friendly, and educational character; there is also an agricultural society. The parish extends eight miles in length by from two to four in breadth. From the summit of a ridge of hills, which extends through the entire length of the parish, the prospect is grand and comprehensive, and several plantations add materially to the beauty of the scene. There are two small lakes, called Loch Lebo and Loch Long. From the former issues the Lugton, a tributary stream of the Garnock; and the latter discharges itself by the Levern, which runs north-east to join the Cart. Population in 1871, 4,633, and in 1881, 4,631.

Two miles from Barrhead, on the Glasgow road, is the small village of HURLET, where are a large chemical and an extensive colliery works. Population returned with Barrhead.

Is a pleasant village in the parish of that name partly in the county of Lanark but chiefly in that of Renfrew, distant from Glasgow two miles. Its original designation was Caer-Cart, i.e., the Castle on the river cart. The parish is of considerable extent, and contains above 3,000 acres, almost wholly arable. Calico and yarn printing and dyeing are extensively carried on in the parish, and in it are paper, pasteboard, and snuff mills. The surface of the land is agreeably diversified with hills and dales, and presents, in many situations, great picturesque beauty. Agriculture is the occupation of a great proportion of the inhabitants; the very summits of the hills are ploughed and cultivated. The parish church, which is in Gothic style of architecture, will accommodate 850 persons, and a Free church has accommodation for £50. There are also several good schools in the parish. The field of Langside, in this parish, is remarkable for being the scene of the last fruitless effort of the unfortunate Mary to regain her crown. An eminence is still pointed out where the queen stood during the engagement. The old castle of Cathcart is a very conspicuous ruin, placed in a commanding situation, with two sides defended by the Cart, to which there is almost perpendicular descent of a tremendous depth. It belonged to the Lords of Cathcart, and has been dismantled over a century. Cathcart parish has an aggregate area of 4,064 acres, and in 1831 contained a population of 12,295.

EAGLESHAM

IS a neat modern village, 10 miles s.w. from Glasgow, and 11 s. there are likewise chapels for United Presbyterians and Roman from Paisley, pleasantly situated in the lower part of the parish to Catholics. The barony of Eaglesham and the patronage of the which it has given its name, about a mile to the north-west of the church was in the Earl of Eginton's family since the year 1250, the old castle of Polnoon; it is composed of two rows of houses, a but has passed into that of Allan Gilmour, Esq. Two cotton mills tributary rivulet to the Cart running through the intermediate give employment to the industrious classes. Fairs are held on the space. The old village was demolished in 1769, and was shortly the third Thursday in May and August (old style). Eaglesham, which afterwards rebuilt under the direction of the former Earl of Elgintoun, who also in 1790 erected a church, of octagonal form, with an embraces 15,066 acres, in 1811 contained a population of 1,714, and an elegant steeple, furnished with a good clock and a fine toned bell; in 1881, 1,935.

POST OFFICE, EAGLESHAM, Walter Hogg, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at quarter-past nine morning and a quarter-past six evening, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes before eight morning and forty-five minutes past five evening.

GOUROCK.

GOUROCK is a small sea-port town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Inverkip, three miles west from Greenock, beautifully situated on the south side of a fine bay of the river Clyde. The haven is favoured with excellent anchorage ground, and vessels to and from Glasgow, Port Glasgow and Greenock frequently take refuge here in stormy weather; a small but commodious quay was constructed, at the cost of about £5,000, which has nine feet depth at low water—an advantage possessed by no other on the Clyde. The town, which is upwards of a mile in length, has become a fashionable resort in the summer months of families from Glasgow and other places. It is said that this port was the first place in Great Britain where red herrings were prepared. The lands of Gourock were incorporated into a burgh of barony by a charter from William and Mary, dated the 24th of April, 1694, with very extensive powers, and amongst other privileges, gives authority to hold a weekly market and two annual fairs, but the successive proprietors have never yet thought proper to avail themselves of this privilege. A neat chapel was built in the year 1773. From the increase of the inhabitants, and the influx of visitors in the summer, it was too small for their accommodation; to obviate this inconvenience a very commodious place of worship, with a handsome tower and clock, was erected in 1832. A Free church, an United Presbyterian chapel, one for Independents, and a Scottish Episcopal church are the other places of worship. There are also commodious Board schools. The Gamble Institute, opened in 1876, was built and endowed by Mrs. Gamble, of Ashburn, at a cost of about £8,000. It contains a public hall, reading room and library, bath rooms, &c. Tramways were laid here from Greenock and opened July 1873. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established here, and works have been erected for the supply of gas to the town, the population of which in 1871, was 2,940 and in 1881, 4,021.

GREENOCK,

THE first seaport in Scotland, is 22 miles w. from Glasgow, 15 w. from Paisley, 66 from Edinburgh, and 419 from London; situated on the south bank of the river Clyde, and connected with Glasgow by means of the Glasgow and South-Western and the Caledonian Railways, and with the coast by the Wemyss Bay Railway. The site of the town is unrivalled for the command of grand and picturesque scenery, combining water, wood, and mountain. In the early part of the eighteenth century Greenock was a small village, inhabited chiefly by fishermen, and without quay or harbour; it now, however, possesses five harbours, which, having been improved at a considerable expense, are most commodious and capacious; they extend 8,000 feet from east to west, and are of sufficient depth to float vessels of great burthens; and in the roads there is good anchorage for ships of the largest class. The quays are spacious, and have well constructed sheds, supported by iron pillars, for the security of merchandise against the weather; there are also good graving and other docks, capable of receiving vessels of any size. The area of the water inside the Victoria Harbour is somewhat over six acres, and the works were erected at a cost of about £120,000. It is one of the finest tidal harbours in the kingdom, and is particularly well suited for vessels of large tonnage, being sixteen feet deep at neap tides, and fourteen at spring tides. At this harbour is a crane capable of lifting eighty tons, so that steamers of the largest class may have their engines fitted without taking the ground. The Albert Harbour was opened in 1866. The water area extends to nearly 11 acres, and the cost of the harbour and the necessary quays, &c. adjoining, was about £200,000. The Prince's Pier, which extends along the Clyde westward from the harbour, was erected at a cost of £70,000. With this pier the Glasgow and South Western Railway has direct communication, thus affording great facilities of conveyance for passengers and their luggage between the steamboats and the trains. The pier was opened in 1870. Besides these, other new and extensive docks which the steadily increasing trade of the town and the river traffic make imperatively necessary are being constructed to the extreme east of the town. The foundation stone of a large and capacious wet dock was laid by the present, (1883) Provost, Donald Campbell, Esq. about a year ago. This dock, which has been designed by Mr. Walter R. Kinnipple, of Greenock and Westminster, is upwards of 2,000 feet in length, 32 feet in depth, and 400 feet in width. When complete it will give accommodation to the largest vessels afloat, and is expected to attract a large share of the Transatlantic trade. There will be large warehouses on the margin of the quays for grain and other merchandise, with elevators and hoists of the most improved description, worked by hydraulic power. As the Caledonian and Glasgow and South-Western Railways will have a high and low level connection with the docks and warehouses, the means of receiving and distributing goods to all parts of the country will be of the most complete character. There is also a large tidal harbour in course of erection outside the wet dock, where it is proposed to discharge the timber vessels, and jetties are to be fitted up at which coals and pig iron will be shipped. This harbour will be 50 acres in extent. These works will cost in all about half a million sterling. Spacious municipal buildings are now being erected in the centre of the town for the accommodation of the various departments connected with the Corporation and Harbour Trust, the architects being the Messrs. Barclay, of Glasgow. These buildings are estimated to cost, including the ground, about £120,000, and will be arranged so as to form part of the existing Town Hall, which is a very commodious structure, and is seated for about 2,000 persons. The foundation stone of the municipal buildings was laid by Provost Campbell, on the same day as that of the James Watt Dock. The old town offices, which have been taken down to make way for the new buildings, were designed in 1760 by the father of the famous engineer, James Watt, who was at the time one of the bailies of the town. The Esplanade was formed at a cost of about £20,000. It extends from the foot of Campbell street, in a noble sweep of about a mile and a quarter, along the shore of the Firth; it is protected by a substantial sea wall, with palisades, and is provided with numerous landing places; it is also well lighted with gas, and seats are disposed at convenient distances for the accommodation of pedestrians. Gas works on an extensive scale have been erected on the road to Port Glasgow. Among the public edifices of this town, the Custom House decidedly ranks first; it is truly a grand national structure. The selection of its situation is also most appropriate; the grand front faces the water, having a fine open space from the edge of the quay. The building is of Grecian architecture; in it the business of the customs, inland revenue and post office is transacted. The entrance to the Custom House is at the north front, facing the river, and that of the inland revenue, at the east front. This fine edifice was erected under the direction of Mr. Burn, of Edinburgh. A new Post Office has just been opened in Wallace square. The building was erected by the Corporation, and has been leased by the Post Office authorities for twenty years. It is an elegant and commodious structure, with private offices on the upper floors. The site is most convenient and central; it was formerly one of the worst localities, but under the powers of the Town Improvement Act, the old houses were cleared away, and the Post Office building erected. The square was re-named after one of the members of Parliament for Greenock—Robert Wallace—who was one of the most earnest advocates of the penny postage. The Greenock coffee and newsroom, in Cathcart square, is well supplied with the various journals and magazines; this fine room is also used as the Greenock Exchange, and is supported by subscription, strangers having the privilege of admission. There is a clubhouse in Ardgowan square, which is handsome and commodious. Greenock is the birthplace of the illustrious Watt, the perfecter of the steam engine, who was born in 1731. In commemoration of this circumstance his son erected a building in Union street, called the Watt Monument and Institution, for the purpose of library, art gallery, &c. upon ground given by the late Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, Bart. The building is from a design by Mr. Blore, architect, of London, and cost upwards of £7,000; a statue of the deceased engineer, from the chisel of Chantrey, is placed within the entrance of the edifice. £2,000 was paid for its execution. The Mechanics' Institute, in Sir Michael street, has also a good library and newsroom. The public baths are in the same building, the entrance being Tobago street.

Among the most important branches under the head of or connected with manufactures are several shipbuilding establishments, the yards of some of which being so complete as to rank second only to those belonging to the Crown; there are several extensive engine works, marine and otherwise, and iron foundries; breweries, ropewalks, tanyards, and extensive sugar refineries; manufactories for woollen and sail cloth; a distillery, and large mills for spinning wool and flax, and for making paper. But in nothing is Greenock more celebrated than in the building and fitting-up of steam vessels, furnishing them not only for London, Bristol, Liverpool and Dublin, but also for the Mediterranean, Portugal, Spain, South America, and New South Wales. Most of the fine steamers belonging to the Cunard American line have been built here. Greenock being the first seaport town in North Britain, its mercantile and shipping trade extends to very considerable importations of rum, sugar, molasses, mahogany, &c., from the West Indies; ice, potash, timber, &c., and naval stores from America; and wine, fruit, &c., from Portugal; many ships are likewise employed in the Baltic trade, and also in the fisheries of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Since the opening of commercial intercourse with India and China, the merchants of this place have prosecuted the trade to those countries with great spirit and commensurate success; the Clyde steamers, from the superiority of their construction, never failing to secure a preference of engagements. Greenock derives vast advantages from the application of steam to navigation, there being a great number of vessels propelled by this powerful auxiliary constantly traversing the Clyde to and from Glasgow and the intermediate places on the banks of the river, where they make stoppages for the convenience of passengers. Large and elegant steamboats leave this port for London, Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Londonderry, the Isle of Man, Campbelltown, Ayr, Inverness, and other places in the Highlands, at stated periods. Indeed, no town in the kingdom affords greater facility to travellers by this mode of conveyance than Greenock. The steamers carrying the Irish mails are despatched from this port.

There is in the neighbourhood of the town the greatest amount of water power to be found in the kingdom; this is derived from an extensive breakwater having been thrown across a valley, in the bottom of which a stream of water flowed, now forming a condensed body of that element, two miles long and half a mile wide. Having a depth of sixty feet, and an elevation of five hundred feet above the level of the sea, it furnishes sites for a large number of mills, with power to any extent that may be required; it is also rendered subservient to the supply of the town with water for domestic purposes. This splendid work was completed in 1837, by a company, under the title of Shaw's Water Company. There are in the town branch establishments of the following banks, viz., the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company's Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Money Order Bank, Limited, and the Provident Savings Bank. The municipal government of Greenock is vested in a provost, six bailies, a town treasurer, a dean of guild, and sixteen councillors, who have the power of making laws for the burgh, and of maintaining peace and order within its limits. The police is under the most efficient regulation, both that of the town and that of the harbour; the management of the latter is confided to its commissioners, along with the town council. The town has its gaol and bridewell, which are included in the County Buildings, situate in Nelson street; here also are held the sheriff and other courts, and apartments are provided for the necessary officers connected therewith. The burgh sends one member to Parliament. The present (1882) representative is James Stewart, Esq., of St. Fillans.

The Theatre Royal, in West Blackhall street, was opened in 1858; it is a comfortable and well-appointed place of amusement. Considerable facilities are afforded for healthful recreation by the establishment of rowing, cricket, and bowling clubs; these are all well supported, and the grounds and bowling greens are kept in excellent order. The Well Park, in Regent street, is small but well laid out; it overlooks the town, and is approached from Cathcart street by a series of terraces. From it on a clear day fine views of the Clyde and the Argyshire hills are obtained. The Wellington Park, situated near Drummochard road, was formally opened and devoted to the public on the first of June, 1872. It is laid out upon ground presented to the town by Sir Michael R. Shaw Stewart, Bart., and is of considerable extent; the lower and most level portion contains bowling, cricket, and play grounds, whilst the more elevated parts, though not susceptible of improvement by cultivation, yet afford space for pleasant rambles, and very fine views are also here presented of the town, the Frith, and surrounding scenery. The cemetery, which is one of the finest in the kingdom, and belongs to the corporation, is about ninety acres in extent, and is beautifully laid out. Three newspapers are published here, the Greenock Advertiser, the Greenock Herald, and the Greenock Telegraph and Clyde Shipping Gazette. There are several charitable institutions, the finest amongst which, as a building, is Sir Gabriel Wood's Mariners' Asylum, an institution founded by the late Sir Gabriel Wood, for the relief and comfort of aged and decayed master mariners and merchant seamen. The Infirmary, erected in 1809, has recently been considerably enlarged; it is ornamental as a public edifice, and its utility is universally acknowledged. The Buchanan Night Asylum affords food and shelter to such poor persons as may be without a home. A Sailors' Home, on the same principle as those of Liverpool and Dublin, is established. A museum has recently been presented to the town by the late Mr. James McLean, of West Bank. It is situated in Kelly street, close to the Monument, and cost about £7,000; it is also endowed. A new and commodious Poor House and Lunatic Asylum has lately been erected by the parochial board of Greenock, at Smithston, about a mile out of the town; the cost was over £80,000. The old Meat Market and Slaughter House has been taken down by the Corporation authorities, and new buildings giving better accommodation are now being erected.

About a mile from Greenock, close to the banks of the Clyde, is a battery mounting eight guns; but there are no barracks, and it is seldom that any soldiers are quartered in the town. There are several very agreeable bathing villages in the vicinity. One of these forms a very pleasing and picturesque object from the quays, being seated under the mountains on the opposite side of the Frith, which is six or seven miles across. Several steamboats go to and from the different villages during the bathing season.

Greenock comprehends three parishes, respectively called the West parish, the Mid parish, and the East parish—all being erected out of, and separated from, the original parish of Innerkip. The first, which may be styled the mother parish of the three, includes the western part of the town, and the greater proportion of the country district. The church is a modern and elegant structure situated in Nelson street; the original church, which was for some time in ruins, has been repaired, and stands near the shore, surrounded by an old burying ground, which is interesting from being the resting place of Burns' "Highland Mary," and to mark which some years since a monument was erected. The Mid parish comprehends the central parts of the town; the church is situated in Cathcart square, and is an elegant structure with a lofty steeple. The site is extremely well selected to render it an ornament to the town, and forms a highly interesting object in the prospect from the river. The East parish possesses places of worship in Regent street, Cartburn street, and Ladyburn. There is an Episcopal (English) church in Union street. The Free church has nine places of worship, and there are buildings connected with the various other denominations, a list of which will be found in the Directory of the town. Greenock Academy is a large establishment for the education of both sexes. It is under the supervision of a rector and lady superintendent and seven assistant masters and two mistresses. This and ten public schools are under the School Board. Several schools of a very commodious description have been erected by the School Board at a cost of £50,000. The weekly market is held on Friday, and there are two annual fairs, one taking place on the first Thursday in July, the other on the fourth Tuesday of November, and horse and cattle markets twice a year—on the Friday before Glasgow Whit-Monday fair, and on the Friday immediately preceding Kibbarchan fair. The population of the town in 1871 was 57,831, but is now estimated to be over 70,000.
